"THE MYSTIC TEMPLE."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JOHN R. FISH.

Far down in the shadowy valley,
Where the spirits and phantom shades loom,
Stands a weird, fantastical temple
In the mystical midnight and gloom.

It sends forth a purple-like lustre
Through the length of its porphyry halls,
Abroad through its blue-linten windows,
Set in its adamant walls.

And the legion of musical zephyrs
That crowd through its wide-open door
Go out with starlight and incense
Through life to eternity's shore.

'Tis said by those who have witnessed
Its soft, candelabrean light,
There's a sanctified spirit that frequents
This labyrinth temple at night.

He comes in the silence of midnight,
When the moon has begun its decline,
And lights with the essence of moon-tide
The chandelier over the shrine.

There's none of its radiance that slumbers
In the midst of the drapery's fold—
Upward it goes through the sky-lights,
All tinted with purple and gold.

The noise of its footsteps awakens,
Far up in the vibrating dome,
Sweet echoes that never cease sounding
This side of their heavenly home.

When the spirit has finished its mission,
And passed through the wide-open door,
A demon comes up from the cloister
And extinguishes the lights evermore.

* * * * * * *

The stones of the temple may crumble,
And the lights in the turrets may die,
But a cresset on the altar is gleaming
That's again to be lighted on high.

THE LADY WITH THE VELVET BAND.

A STORY OF THRILLING INTEREST.

BY ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

CHAPTER I.

A QUAINT OLD CHAMBER AND ITS STRANGE OCCUPANT.

In the number of those delightful cities which lie scattered along the majestic banks of the Rhine, like the beads of a chaplet of which that river is the thread, we must distinguish Manheim, the second residence of the grand duke.

Now that the steam vessels sailing up and down the Rhine pass through Manheim; now that the railway extends to it; now that Manheim, amid the cracking of musketry, has thrown down, with hair disheveled and bloodstained robe, the standard of revolt against her grand duke, I can no longer tell what Manheim is; but at the period when this history commences, that is nearly fifty-six years ago, I am going to describe her.

She was then the first, the most excellent of German cities; calm, and yet given to politics, somewhat sad, or rather thoughtful; she was the city celebrated in the romances of Auguste Lafontaine and Goethe's poems, such as "Henrietta Belmann" and "Werther."

And all you really have to do is to glance a single moment at Manheim, in order to judge immediately, by her genteel rows of houses, her fine wide streets with peeping grass, her mythological fountain, her umbrageous promenade with acacias growing on each side; in order to judge, I say, that life must be sweet and docile in such a paradise, provided always that the turbulent passion of life does not interfere, like Werther's pistol, to break the charm. There is one spot, above all, with quite a peculiar character; the place, I mean, where the church and the theatre meet together.

Both church and playhouse must have been erected at the same time, probably by the same architect; and probably about the middle of the last century, when the whims of a favorite shed their influence over art, to such a degree that on one side bore her name, from the church to the pavilion, from the bronze statue ten cubits high to the china statuettes on the mantlepiece.

The church and the theatre of Manheim belong, therefore, to the Pompadour style. The church has the niches on the outside; in one of these niches the statue of Minerva, in the other a statue of Hebe, the goddess of youth and the cup-bearer to Jupiter.

The portal of the theatre is crowned with two sphinxes—one representing Comedy, the other Tragedy. The first of these sphinxes holds a mask beneath one of her paws, the second a poniard. Both have some vegetable roots intertwined with their hair, and the nape powdered, which wonderfully adds to their Egyptian character.

In other respects, the whole place, with its humpbacked houses, frizzled trees, festooned walls, and so on, all partakes of the same character, and constitutes an ensemble, or collective group, very odd indeed.

Well! it is in a chamber situated on the first floor of a house whose windows look sideways on the door of the Jesuits' church, that we are going to introduce our readers, first observing to them that we are making them grow younger by half a century and upward, the time we are going to talk about being Sunday, the 10th of May, 1793. All nature is bursting through the bud, the sea-weed bedecks the edge of the river side, the daisies are smiling in the meadow, the honeysuckles start up in the hedgerows, the rose glistens in the garden, and love kindles the bosoms of the young.

Now, there was no heart more agitated at that time, either at Manheim or in the suburbs, than that of the young man who inhabited that little chamber we have just referred to, and whose window looked out obliquely on the front of the Jesuits' church.

Both the young man and his chamber deserve severally to be particularly described.

The room was, most assuredly, tenanted by a whimsical and picturesque spirit; for it had at once the aspect of a working-room, a music-shop and a study. There was a painter's board, an easel and brushes, and on the easel a half-finished sketch.

There was likewise a guitar, a violin, and a piano; and an unfolded sheet of music lay upon the piano. Furthermore, there was pen, ink and paper; and the beginning of a ballad had been scrawled on one of the sheets.

Then, along the walls, you might have seen bows, arrows, and the crossbow of the fifteenth century, engravings of the sixteenth, musical instruments of the seventeenth, trunks of every age, drinking jugs of every shape, ewers of every kind; in fine, glass necklaces, feather fans, stuffed lizards, dry flowers; a world of odds and ends.

Was the occupant of that room a painter, a musician, or a poet? Was he a David, a Mozart, or a Byron? We do not know. But very certainly he was a smoker; for, in the midst of all these collections, the most complete, the most obvious of all, seated in the place of honor, and basking in the sun on an old sofa, within reach of hand, was spread out a collection of pipes. But whatever he might be—whether a poet, a musician, or a painter, or a smoker—at that time he was neither smoking, nor painting, nor making notes, nor composing verses.

He was looking out, erect and motionless, leaning against the wall, and holding in his breath. He was looking out of his open window, ensconced behind the curtain, to see without being seen; looking out as one does when one's eyes are but the telescope of the heart.

What was he looking at? A place quite lonely at the time—the front of the Jesuits' church. And now, what was his appearance?

He was a young man of eighteen at the most, short of stature, lean and wild-looking. His long black hair fell from his forehead down over his eyes and obliged him frequently to brush it aside with his hand, and through that flowing veil of hair his eyes shone with a rigid glare, like the look of a man whose mental faculties are not always in a perfect state of equilibrium.

This wild young man was neither a poet, nor a painter, nor a musician; but a composite of the three—whimsical, fantastic, good, bad, brave, timid, active, idle, everything by turns; this young man was called Ernest Theodore William Hoffmann.

He was born on a stormy, Winter's night, in 1776, while the wind blew, the snow fell, and the poor man suffered for lack of the rich man's comforts; he was born at Kœnigsberg, in Old Prussia, so weak, so slim, so scantily built, that his diminutive, exiguous body made every one believe that he wanted a grave rather than a cradle. He was born in the very year when Schiller wrote his "Brigands;" he was born of one of those burgher families which used to be seen in France in the time of Frende, such as we still see in Germany, but such as we shall shortly see nowhere at all. He was born of a mother with a sickly constitution, but of deep piety, which lent to her afflicted person a look of most touching melancholy; he was born of a father whose mind and aspect were equally harsh and discouraging, for he was a magistrate and peace officer in an upper court. Grouped around that father and that mother were uncles, some of them judges, some bailiffs and sheriffs, and some burgomasters; aunts, who were still young, handsome and flirting; both uncles and aunts being musical, fond of the arts, full of life, spirit and vivacity. Hoffmann used to say he had seen them; he still remembered them as they flitted about—he, a little child of six, eight, and ten years old; he remembered them playing certain strange concerts, in which each played upon one of those old instruments whose very names are no longer understood. True, nobody but Hoffmann had ever seen those musical uncles and aunts, and all of them had successively retired from the stage of life like spectres, after having extinguished, as they withdrew, the light that hung over their harpsichords.

Yet of all these uncles, there still remained one. Of all these aunts, one still survived. The hand of time, lavish and prodigal as it is unto death, still retains some witness of the past to inform the future, if not to instruct it.

The aunt was one of Hoffmann's pleasant recollections. In the house where he had spent his youth, there lived a sister of his mother's, a young woman with gentle looks, whose soft eyes penetrated into the depths of the soul; a young woman, mild, kindly, full of mirth and keen perceptions, who, in that being whom all looked upon as a wild maniac, a raving madman, could see a superior mind, and who, though none but the mother believed her, predicted his glory; a prediction which drew tears from that fond mother, for she knew that poverty and misfortune are the inseparable companions of glory and genius. So true is that fine saying of Rousseau's: "What is my genius but a candle, which enlightens others while it consumes itself?"

This beloved aunt was called Aunt Sophy. Like all the rest of the family, she was musical, and her instrument was the lute. When little Hoffmann woke up in his cradle, he found himself swimming about in that vibrating harmony; when he opened his eyes, he saw the graceful form of the young woman bending over the instrument. She was usually clad in a light-green dress with red bows; she was usually accompanied by an old musician with bandy legs and white wig, playing on a bass viol larger than himself, to which he clung, going up and down along it like a lizard climbing over a gourd. It was this torrent of music falling like a cascade from that comely Muse which had made a musician of Hoffmann.

We have said, therefore, that Aunt Sophy was one of the pleasing recollections of the youth. Not so was it with his uncle. The death of Hoffmann's father; his mother's illness and languor, had left the boy to the care of that uncle.

He was a man as rigidly exact as poor Hoffmann was loose and unsettled, as regular as poor Hoffmann was capricious; and whose spirit of order and punctuality was perpetually exercised on his nephew, but with no better result than the spirit of Charles V. had been exercised on his clocks: it was in vain the uncle tried—the clock would never strike the hour for his nephew when it did for him.

Still, with all his punctuality and order, Hoffmann's uncle was not an enemy of fancy and the arts. He went so far as to tolerate music, poetry and painting. But he maintained that no sensible man ought to have recourse to such relaxations until he had dined, and wished to facilitate his digestion. According to this thesis he had regulated the boy's life; so many hours for sleep, so many hours for study, so many hours for food, so many minutes for music, painting and poetry.

Young Hoffmann did not approve of this distribution of his time, which he would have turned topsy-turvy had it depended on himself, giving those things to the hours which were allotted to the minutes. But he was not master. The consequence was he had conceived an aversion to his uncle's house, and had fled one fine morning from Kœnigsberg with a few thalers in his pockets, and had pushed on to Heidelberg.

From Heidelberg he had traveled to Manheim, where he had taken a lodging close to the theatre; and at that time the theatre of Manheim was the scene of the rival lyrics of France and Italy.

So, then, Hoffmann was domiciled at Manheim, living hard by the playhouse on the produce of his painting, music and poetry, not to speak of certain nice gold Fredericks, which his mother sent him from time to time, just at the period when we, arrogating to ourselves the privilege of the Devil upon Two Sticks, are about to open the ceiling of his chamber, and to show him where he stands to our readers.

CHAPTER II.

A LOVER AND A MADMAN.

At a moment when several persons were leaving the Jesuits' church, when the mass was not half performed, and thus quickened Hoffmann's earnest attention, there was a knock at his door. The young man shook his head and stamped impatiently, but did not answer.

There was a second knock. An angry scowl was darted at the intruder through the door.

The knock was repeated a third time. This time the young man remained quite still, and had evidently made up his mind not to open the door.

But instead of knocking again, the visitor called out: "Theodore."

"Ah! so it is you, Zacharias Werner," muttered Hoffmann.

"Yes, it is I; do you wish to be alone?"

"No; wait a moment." Saying which, Hoffmann went and opened the door.

A tall young man, with light-colored hair, pale and lean, and somewhat excited, came in. He might have been three or four years older than our hero. The moment he went in he laid his hand on Theodore's shoulder, and put his lips to his brow as an elder brother might have done.

He was, indeed, a true and veritable brother to Hoffmann. Born in the same house as himself, Zacharias Werner, the future author of "Martin Luther," of "Attila," of "The 24th of February," of "The Baltic Cross," had grown up under the united care, the twofold solicitude of his own mother and of Hoffmann's.

The two women, both of them already partially afflicted with a nervous affection which resulted in madness, had transmitted that malady to their children. This disease, weakened by transmission, exhibited itself in a fantastic imagination in Hoffmann, and in a melancholy disposition in the case of Werner. The mother of the latter thought herself entrusted with a divine commission; her boy Zacharias was destined to be the new Christ, the future Saviour promised by the Scriptures. While he lay asleep, she would weave a crown of blue-bells and place it on his forehead; she knelt down before him, sang the most beautiful canticles of Luther in a soft, agreeable voice, and expected to see at the end of every verse the little coronet converted into a halo or aureola.

The two children were educated together. And one thing above all had urged Hoffmann to run away from his uncle's, and that was because Zacharias was living at Heidelberg. On his side, Zacharias, who rendered Hoffmann friendship for friendship, had left Heidelberg and had joined his comrade at Manheim, when Hoffmann had declined sojourning in that town.

But when once they had met again, and had reached Manheim, and were no longer subject to the tender authority of a mother, the two young men felt their taste for traveling increase, and had resolved to visit Paris.

Werner desired to see the strange spectacle which the capital of France must present in the midst of that reign of terror which it had already entered upon.

Hoffmann wanted to compare the French music with the Italian, and, above all, to study the resources of the French opera with regard to its scenery and decoration; for he already secretly harbored the idea which he ever after indulged, of some day becoming the manager of a theatre.

Hoffmann expected to see the museums of which he had heard so much, and to compare the Italian pictures with those of the German school.

Besides, whatever the private motives that urged on the two friends may have been, their desire to visit France and her far-famed capital was alike impassioned and irresistible; to satisfy this desire, one thing only was necessary—money. But, by a strange coincidence, Zacharias and Theodore both received five gold Fredericks from home on the same day.

Ten gold Fredericks amounted to nearly two hundred livres, which was a pretty sum for two students who lived on five thalers a month, food, lodging and fire. But that sum was still quite inadequate to defray their projected journey.

A thought had struck the two young men, and as it had occurred to both at once, they had taken it for an inspiration from Heaven. This idea was to go to the gaming-house, and to hazard each of them his five gold Fredericks. With these ten Fredericks alone they could travel anywhere; but in risking the ten Fredericks they might possibly gain a sum sufficient to travel through the world.

No sooner said than done. The bathing season was approaching, and ever since the first of May the gaming-houses were open. So Werner and Hoffmann went together into a "hell." Werner was the first to venture, and lost, as we have stated, his five gold Fredericks, which it was Hoffmann's turn.

Hoffmann threw down his first gold Frederick with a trembling hand, and won. Encouraged by this start he doubled his stake.

Hoffmann was in luck that night; he won four stakes out of five, and he was one of those who are confident in fortune. Instead of hesitating, he went on doubling the stakes every time. Without any settled combination, without any calculation at all, he threw down his gold upon a card, and his money was doubled, trebled, quadrupled, in a trice. Zacharias, who trembled as if he had the ague, kept whispering to him: "Enough, Theodore, enough!" but in vain; the gamester laughed at so puerile a timidity. Gold followed gold, and engendered gold. At last two o'clock struck. It was the hour for closing the establishment for the night. The game was stopped; the two young men, without counting it, took up each of them a pile of gold. Zacharias went out the first, scarcely crediting his good fortune. Hoffmann was about to follow him, when an old officer, who had not lost sight of him the whole time he had been playing, stopped him as he was crossing the threshold of the door.

"Young man," he said, "if you go on at that rate, you will certainly break the bank, I allow; but when you have broken the bank, you will only be an easier prey for the Devil."

And then, without waiting for Hoffmann's answer, he disappeared. Hoffmann then went out, but he was an altered man. The old soldier's prediction had cooled him like an ice bath, and the gold with which his pockets were stuffed felt heavier. It seemed to him like a burden of iniquity.

Werner was waiting for him in high glee. They returned home together to Hoffmann's—the one laughing, dancing, and singing; the other thoughtful, and almost gloomy.

Still they were both determined to set out the next day for Paris. They embraced before separating.

"THE BROKEN RING."—AT A "THIEF'S RAFFLE" IN ST. GILES—WHAT GRACE MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

When Hoffmann was left alone he counted his gold. It amounted to 5,000 thalers (about 5,000 dollars). He reflected a long time, and seemed to take some arduous resolution.

While he was thus reflecting by the light of a lamp, his countenance was pale and his forehead moist with perspiration. At every sound he heard, though it were but the shiver of a fly's wing, Hoffmann shuddered, turned his head about, and looked around him in alarm.

The officer's prediction returned to his thoughts; and he repeated to himself some verses from Faust; and he fancied he could see the rat gnawing at the door-sill, and the black barbel in the corner of the room.

At length his mind was resolved.

He set aside one thousand thalers, which he looked upon as the sum indispensably required to defray his journey, bundled together the other four thousand thalers, then stuck a card with sealing-wax on the top, with this recommendation inscribed thereupon:

"For the Worshipful Burgomaster of Kœnigsberg, to be distributed among the poorest families in the town."

After that, satisfied with the victory he had gained over himself, enheartened by what he had done, he undressed himself, went to bed, and slept away the night without interruption until seven in the morning.

At seven o'clock Theodore awoke, and his first look was directed toward his thousand thalers and the sealed deposit. He thought and feared he had been dreaming.

The sight of the money reassured him, and he found that what had happened on the night before was a substantial reality. But there was another reality for Hoffmann, although no symbol was present to remind him of it, and that was the old officer's prediction.

Therefore, without any regret, he dressed himself as usual; and, taking his 4,000 thalers under his arm, went and carried them himself to the diligence office for Kœnigsberg, after carefully locking up the 1,000 thalers that remained to him. Then, as the two friends had agreed to set out for France that very day, Hoffmann began to make preparation for his departure.

While he was thus busy, going in and coming out, now brushing a coat or folding up a shirt, or sorting his handkerchiefs, Hoffmann kept glancing from time to time into the street, and stood at length in the attitude in which we introduced him to our story.

A young girl, between sixteen and eighteen, and recently a stranger in Manheim, since she was unknown to Hoffmann, came from the farther end of the street, and was pacing along toward the church. Hoffmann, either in his poetic dreams or in his visions as an artist, had never seen anything like her. She was a being who surpassed not only all that he had seen, but all that he had ever hoped to see.

The young girl was accompanied by an aged attendant. They both went slowly up the front steps leading to the Jesuits' church, and passed under the porch. Hoffmann left his box half packed up, a snuff-colored coat half dusted, his ruffing-cake half folded, and stood rapidly behind the curtain. And there it was we took him up, awaiting the return of the young devotee he had seen going in.

One thing only did he fear—that she might possibly be an angel, and that, instead of leaving by the door, she might take flight through the ceiling on her return. Such was the fear that filled him when an old friend Zacharias Werner had found him.

After saluting his friend, he heaved a most profound sigh. Although Zacharias Werner was always very pale, he was still paler now than usual.

"What ails you?" inquired Hoffmann with sincere uneasiness.

"Oh! my friend!" cried Werner; "I am a thief, a rascal! I am a most pitiful wretch! I desire to die—cleave my head open with an axe—run a knife through my heart. I no longer deserve to see the light of day."

"Pshaw!" replied Hoffmann placidly, for he felt truly happy to himself; "what has happened, dear friend?"

"What has happened—what has happened, do you say? You ask me what has happened? Well, my friend, the Devil tempted me!"

"What do you mean?"

"That when this morning I saw all my gold, there was such a heap of it, that I thought it must be a dream."

"How! a dream?"

"The table was quite covered with it," continued Werner. "And then when I saw that, my friend, I saw myself owner of a thousand thalers! when I saw the gleam of each separate piece of coin, my fit returned—I could not resist it. O God! I took up one-third of the gold and went to the gaming-house——"

"And lost?"

"Every doit of it—to the last kreutzer."

"It cannot be helped; besides, you have got two-thirds left."

"I wish I had. I returned for the second third, and——"

"Lost it like the first?"

"Quicker still, my friend, quicker still."

"Then you returned for the last third?"

"I flew back; took my remaining thalers, and laid them down on the red."

"Whereupon," said Hoffmann, "the black turned up—and it not so?"

"Ah, my friend! the black, the horrible black, without delay, without remorse, as if, when it turned up, it was not carrying away my last hope."

"And you only regret the money on account of our journey—is it not so?"

"That's all. Oh, had I but put aside enough to go to Paris with—five hundred thalers!"

"That would console you for the loss of the remainder?"

"In a moment."

"Well, let it be so, my dear Zacharias," said Theodore, leading him toward the drawer; "see, here are five hundred thalers; go."

"How!—go?" exclaimed Werner; "but you?"

"Oh, I don't go any longer."

"How! not go?"

"No; at least not at present."

"But what reason can you have, Theodore?"

Hoffmann pulled his friend over to the window. The people were beginning to come out of the church.

"There, look, look!" said he, pointing to somebody.

And truly the fair unknown was just then appearing on the porch; she moved slowly down the steps, her missal in her hand, her head bent over, looking as modest and pensive as Goethe's Margaret.

"Do you see her?" muttered Hoffmann, "do you see her?"

"Certainly."

"Well, what say you?"

"I say there is no woman in the world who is worth the sacrifice of a journey to Paris, who is good enough to separate two friends—no, were she even the beautiful Antonia, the daughter of old Gottlieb Murr, the new leader of the band at the Manheim Theatre."

"So you know her, then?"

"Certainly."

"Do you know her father?"

"He was leader of the band at the theatre of Frankfort."

"Can you give me a letter of introduction to him?"

"Certainly I can, since I tell you I know him."

"Sit down there, Zacharias, and write it for me."

Zacharias sat down at the table, and began to write. He said that, being on the eve of setting out for France, he begged permission to recommend his young friend Theodore Hoffmann to his old friend Gottlieb Murr.

Hoffmann scarcely allowed Zacharias time to finish his letter. As soon as it was signed he snatched it up, and, embracing his friend, he rushed from the chamber.

"Never mind," cried Zacharias Werner to him for the last time, "you——"

"There is no woman so pretty as to enable a man to forget Paris on her account."

Hoffmann heard his friend's observation, but did not deign to turn round to answer him, even by a sign of approbation or dissent. As for Zacharias Werner, he put his five hundred thalers into his pocket, and, to escape from all further temptation, ran off as fast as he could to the stage-coach office, while Hoffmann hurried at an equal pace to the house of Antonia's father.

And Hoffmann came and knocked at the door of Master Gottlieb Murr, at the very moment Zacharias Werner was climbing up the Strasburg diligence.

FORGET-ME-NOTS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY OTTMAR H. ROTHACKER.

They are only withered flowers,
Simply a bunch of forget-me-nots,
Yet they bring to me the sweetest thoughts
Of long-gone, dreamful hours.

You have heard the olden story
Of a bit of this self-same flower, which threw
The wealth of the water-nymph to view
In all its glittering glory.

So, too, my flowers shiver
The look of Memory's farthermost room;
And out of the dark and sombre gloom
Flows, like a sun-lit river,

The straggest, loveliest vision—
A languid day in the early June,
When the azure sky of a summer afternoon
Were blue as skies elysian;

When dainty sunbeams, falling,
Flashed and played with merriest grace
Over the fairest, sweetest face,
And shimmered like a veil falling.

All this doth pass before me—
I walk in a purer atmosphere,
With fields more green and skies more clear,
And the glamour of romance o'er me.

THE BROKEN RING.

A LONDON STORY.

BY JOHN LATEY, JR.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE NIGHT SIDE OF LONDON BY DAYLIGHT.

Detective Whittle—seemingly stolid as a Devonshire clodhopper, save for his sharp, small eyes—enters Bow Street Police Court on the morning of Will Truman's accident, quite unconscious of the clue that awaits him.

Like most other readers of the morning papers, he had been struck with the following paragraph:

"ONE MORE UNFORTUNATE."—Scarcely a month passes without our having to record one of those sad episodes of London life of which Thomas Hood sang so pitifully in his "Bridge of Sighs." The last incident of this kind was perhaps the most distressing of its sad night. As a Thames police skiff was passing under Waterloo Bridge, the superintendent, steering, saw a dark body rushing down, and heard it splash into the river a little to the right of the boat. The two men rowing, who also heard the splash, rested on their oars; the superintendent pulled the right rudder-line, and the skiff swerved near the spot where the figure of a woman was seen to enter the water. A moment after, a head was seen above the surface some yards down the river, and the superintendent saw by the long hair and by the loose dress on the struggling arms that it was a woman. A few lusty strokes brought the boat close to the poor creature, and the men were able to lift her easily inside, for she was light enough. She was taken to the Thames police-ship. When last observed, the unfortunate murderer was still living."

Dull street illustrates in an eloquent manner the prudent policy of the ducal owner of one of the vastest properties in London. As long as each gloomy tenement is literally thronged from cellar to garret with tenants who are content to herd together with as little regard for decency as the beasts of the field, and with far less regard for health, why on earth should his Grace's agent pull down the rickety houses, and substitute healthy and roomy ones?

Dull street has one compensation. If the men to supply all St. Giles' with boots and shoes; for in the southern sweep of its crescent almost every underground kitchen is a cobbler's shop, and the pavement is fringed with serried lines of sidespring and every variety of foot-gear, cobblers "sticking to their lasts" with a vengeance at the bottom of the steps, although hard by there dwells a democratic son of St. Crispin, who, knowing well "where the shoe pinches," is ever foremost in urging that light shall be shed on these foul homes of the poor, and who is naturally, in consequence, the butt of the chaste jibes of the whole row in the tall ladder of Society.

It is a hot, sultry night as Detective Whittle, quite as "horsey" in appearance as Barney Fluker, who accompanies him, enters Dull street, bound for Joe Bilk's beer-shop.

"A raffle on to-night at Joe Bilk's, did you say, Barney?" asks the detective of Fluker.

"Yes; but 'tisn't likely anybody'll be there you want, sir!" responds Barney, invariably at the detective's beck and call by reason of his knowledge of Barney's peculiar mode of livelihood.

"Who's the raffle for?"

"Sam the Scholar."

"The deuce it is!" and thereupon Detective Whittle occupies his mind in reflecting on the many coincidences he has come across, till Barney Fluker seizes his arm, and they turn into a small beer-shop.

Bestowing but a glance at the thronged bar, they proceed (traight along a narrow passage into a small stone-flagged yard. Pushing open a door to the left, Detective Whittle finds himself on the threshold of the back kitchen, scene for the nonce of a sad make-believe at festivity.

Barney Fluker is well known to the company, and—in accordance, may be, with the motto of "Honor among thieves"—the presence of his companion is not openly objected to, although not a few recognize the well-known features of the detective.

So their appearance does not cause the young couple indulging in an Irish jig to pause a moment in their jigging, nor the blind old Irish fiddler to scrape a whit less vigorously.

Bloated Joe Blink himself presides at a little, shaky, four-legged table in the right-hand corner; and into the plate of coin in front of him a notorious "fence" is dropping his sixpence, chaffed the while by Joe and his cronies for his meanness towards one who, before he got "into trouble," was his best customer.

The jigging couple do not materially detract from the deep depression and silence which are general. Even their efforts at hilarity—save when they are spasmodically inspirited into a spurt of enforced gayety, at the call of Joe Blink—are mainly labored, each gazing sadly now and again at the ceiling, as the monotonous tapitty-tap is persevered in.

"Just such another pretty girl as Mr. Brent's daughter might have been," thinks Detective Whittle of the young, flashily-attired girl, in whose pale, comely cheeks there yet seems to lurk an atom of the innate refinement of girlhood.

The jig over, Detective Whittle and Barney cross the kitchen to drop their tributes into the plate, and learn the secret Joe Bilk shares with "Sam the Scholar."

"Well, if this aint a real pleasure, Mr. Whittle. I'm blowed!" exclaims Joe Bilk, as he grasps the paper with Sam's scholarly handwriting on it. "Ah! glad to 'ear the poor boy looked well, sir. Why, Sam means by this lay that it's time Mother Jones was blown upon. She's the woman you want, sir. Reg'lar bad karacter. Anybody'll tell you her number in Christian alley, sir. Thank you kindly, sir. Good-night.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A PRISON RUSE.

An hour or so later finds Detective Whittle speeding up the river on board a Citizen steamboat. Here he is gliding past the Houres of Parliament, and he has not yet hit upon a plan to outwit the prison authorities and obtain from "Sam the Scholar" the information Sam can apparently give. At last the very idea for the junction strikes him.

The dingy advertisement with Sam's handwriting below it is forthwith produced from his pocket. After a glance at Sam's pungent memorandum:

"To get something out of old Whittle for this information,"

the detective scribbles with equal brevity the reply:

"Old Whittle is here, ready to pay for bona fide information."

Repocketing the advertisement, he pulls out the large official permit to serve as an open sesame to Millbank Prison; and, landing at the pier, he soon gains entrance, for the double-shotted door flies open, and he is allowed to pass at the first sight of the Government order.

It is a Fenian convict Detective Whittle avowedly calls to see; but, following the warder, who serves as guide along the gloomy corridor of the first pentagon they enter, he succeeds in pumping him so well that he learns it is in this very corridor that Sam's cell is.

The very number of Sam's cell is also furnished by the easy warder. So, as the light streams down from the high, barred window straight on No. —, Detective Whittle has a fit of curiosity to stop for a moment to watch the solitary oakum-picker inside.

The keen-looking young convict in the prison gray trousers and striped prison shirt almost allows a look of recognition to flash up into his intelligent eye-brows as he catches sight of the detective through the cross bars of the outer iron-door of the cell.

The look is nipped in the bud, however, as Whittle furtively places his finger to his lips in signal of secrecy. Down to his monotonous occupation bends Sam again, for he has not nearly completed the three pounds of oakum he is bound to pick in the day.

"Sam the Scholar" doggedly takes a length of junk from the wedged portion by his side, untwists it, separates it into cork-screw strands, further unrolls these strands by sliding them backwards and forwards on his knee with the palm of his hand until the meshes are loosened.

The warder being still close at hand, Detective Whittle feels bound to tarry yet longer until he can seize the opportunity to jerk his written message to Sam.)

Pursuing his dry and irksome employment, Sam places the strand on the head of a hook fastened to his knees, saws it smartly to and fro, thereby removing the tar and grating the fibres apart, finishing the task, as far as this piece of junk is concerned, by drawing out the hemp like cotton wool.

A savory whiff now comes from the nearest prison kitchen. The warder naturally strolls in the direction of the appetizing fumes. Now is the moment for Whittle's ruse. He throws the piece of paper, folded like a three-cornered billet-doux and containing a little bit of pencil, as far into the cell as he can, and then turns to follow his guide, for he has noted that Sam darted from his stool and instantly seized the note.

Vigilantly guarded by the warders, armed with loaded rifles, the Fenian that Whittle is in quest of is now taking his daily "constitutional" in the exercise-yard, the most honest-looking, certainly, of the squad to which he is attached.

Drill over, it proves as useless as he thought it would prove to endeavor to elicit any secret from this keen-witted Irishman. Detective Whittle, therefore, soon leaves him, and quickly makes for Sam's corridor, while his guide slips aside to pass judgment on the dinner-soup in kitchen. He, fortunately, gains Sam's cell before the warder has turned into the corridor after him, though he can hear his approaching footsteps.

But here Sam is close to the iron door, ready with his reply—scribbled, doubtless, in the note which he deftly hands, with a significant look, but without a word, to Detective Whittle. Freely the latter breathes again, as Sam noiselessly resumes his seat; and it is with hasty steps that he leaves the corridor, and, bidding a smiling "Good-bye!" to the warder, quits the prison.

How eagerly he scans Sam's note when once free from Millbank may be imagined.

The reply is:

"Joe Bilk, beer-house keeper, Dull street, St. Giles', will tell you all I know.".

CHAPTER XIX.

A THIEF'S RAFFLE IN ST. GILES'.

Dull street is surely the dullest street in St. Giles'. Far from there being the naphtha glare of Seven Dials Market here to-night, Dull street is almost as dark as the Rookery itself, and almost as noisome as the cover-less murder yet rests.

Dull street illustrates in an eloquent manner the prudent policy of the ducal owner of one of the vastest properties in London. As long as each gloomy tenement is literally thronged from cellar to garret with tenants who are content to herd together with as little regard for decency as the beasts of the field, and with far less regard for health, why on earth should his Grace's agent pull down the rickety houses, and substitute healthy and roomy ones?

Dull street has one compensation. If the men to supply all St. Giles' with boots and shoes; for in the southern sweep of its crescent almost every underground kitchen is a cobbler's shop, and the pavement is fringed with serried lines of sidespring and every variety of foot-gear, cobblers "sticking to their lasts" with a vengeance at the bottom of the steps, although hard by there dwells a democratic son of St. Crispin, who, knowing well "where the shoe pinches," is ever foremost in urging that light shall be shed on these foul homes of the poor, and who is naturally, in consequence, the butt of the chaste jibes of the whole row in the tall ladder of Society.

It is a hot, sultry night as Detective Whittle, quite as "horsey" in appearance as Barney Fluker, who accompanies him, enters Dull street, bound for Joe Bilk's beer-shop.

"A raffle on to-night at Joe Bilk's, did you say, Barney?" asks the detective of Fluker.

"Yes; but 'tisn't likely anybody'll be there you want, sir!" responds Barney, invariably at the detective's beck and call by reason of his knowledge of Barney's peculiar mode of livelihood.

"Who's the raffle for?"

"Sam the Scholar."

"The deuce it is!" and thereupon Detective Whittle occupies his mind in reflecting on the many coincidences he has come across, till Barney Fluker seizes his arm, and they turn into a small beer-shop.

Bestowing but a glance at the thronged bar, they proceed (traight along a narrow passage into a small stone-flagged yard. Pushing open a door to the left, Detective Whittle finds himself on the threshold of the back kitchen, scene for the nonce of a sad make-believe at festivity.

Barney Fluker is well known to the company, and—in accordance, may be, with the motto of "Honor among thieves"—the presence of his companion is not openly objected to, although not a few recognize the well-known features of the detective.

So their appearance does not cause the young couple indulging in an Irish jig to pause a moment in their jigging, nor the blind old Irish fiddler to scrape a whit less vigorously.

Bloated Joe Blink himself presides at a little, shaky, four-legged table in the right-hand corner; and into the plate of coin in front of him a notorious "fence" is dropping his sixpence, chaffed the while by Joe and his cronies for his meanness towards one who, before he got "into trouble," was his best customer.

The jigging couple do not materially detract from the deep depression and silence which are general. Even their efforts at hilarity—save when they are spasmodically inspirited into a spurt of enforced gayety, at the call of Joe Blink—are mainly labored, each gazing sadly now and again at the ceiling, as the monotonous tapitty-tap is persevered in.

"Just such another pretty girl as Mr. Brent's daughter might have been," thinks Detective Whittle of the young, flashily-attired girl, in whose pale, comely cheeks there yet seems to lurk an atom of the innate refinement of girlhood.

The jig over, Detective Whittle and Barney cross the kitchen to drop their tributes into the plate, and learn the secret Joe Bilk shares with "Sam the Scholar."

"Well, if this aint a real pleasure, Mr. Whittle. I'm blowed!" exclaims Joe Bilk, as he grasps the paper with Sam's scholarly handwriting on it. "Ah! glad to 'ear the poor boy looked well, sir. Why, Sam means by this lay that it's time Mother Jones was blown upon. She's the woman you want, sir. Reg'lar bad karacter. Anybody'll tell you her number in Christian alley, sir. Thank you kindly, sir. Good-night.

CHAPTER XX.

THE CLUE AT THE WAKE.

Had Detective Whittle been confident that a successful issue of his long search was near at hand, he could not have entered more heartily into the quest for Mrs. Jones, to whom Joe Bilk referred him for news of the lost daughter of Richard Brent.

Professional love for the solution of mystery is his sole incentive; for, as certainly as circumstantial evidence can assure him of the fact, he fears it is only too clear that his river-side affair in Bathe proved a death-chase not only for him, but for Grace.

As endless as the difficulties he has to surmount are the resources of Detective Whittle. Thus, "Mother Jones" of Christian alley wanted, he is transformed into a Covent-garden porter, and is, in the most natural manner in the world, accompanying Jim O'Flanagan, each with a half-gallon can of beer, to the wake whereat "Mother Jones" is probably now making merry.

"It's immadiate ye're wanting 'er, the sargint sed, sor, didn't 'e?" asks Jim O'Flanagan of the disguised detective. "'Cos, if it aint immadiate, it's in the marning I'd be advising ye to call; for I'm afther thinking there'll be a purty bit of a noise at Paddy Shannon's wake to-night. She and Paddy's wife are always rowing."

"Yes; my time's valuable. I must see her to-night," answers at once the detective. "And mind, I'm your mate at the Garden."

"Oh, niver fear, sor. Ye're bringing yer welcome wid yer. They'll be too dry to be partikler about their guests."

Picking their way between the sprawling figures of half-naked youths and gaunt men, worn out with their day's labor in the hot, burning streets, and taking their rest at full length on the narrow pavement; and passing the neatly beshawled or slatternly women seated on the door-steps, some withered and wrinkled and yellow with age and want, others plump-cheeked enough, and brightly clean in comparison with the dingy, foul, and evil-smelling tenements, one dark house seeming to reek even yet with the blood of the poor girl, whose assassin will never be discovered now, seemingly, save by the means which will bring to light other murderers who have escaped scot-free—by confession; proceeding up this narrow street of wretched "lodgings for single men" on one side and towering buildings of quite a different character on the other, Jim O'Flanagan and his mate, their brimming cans envied at each step, soon reach Christian alley, down which savory lane they turn.

Christian alley on this hot Summer's night is a worthy remnant of the old Rookery—a fetid remnant of that infamous quarter which harbored the most vicious and most criminal classes of London—but a squalid remnant which now gives shelter to some of the hardest workers in the army of toilers in this vast city.

The narrow roadway of Christian alley is choked to-night with dust-heaps, intermingled with the rotting vegetable refuse of the coster inhabitants. Hanging out of windows, like banners from flag-masts, are shirts and linen of Christian alley, for it is one weekly distinction of Christian alley that it washes its dirty linen at home. So that it will be no obtrusion on the part of Christian alley that will ever make its existence known to the psalm-singers of the three churches which stand shoulder to shoulder, in true good-fellowship, at the eastern end of this gruesome lane, but which turn their backs

NEW YORK CLIPPER.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1873.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters requiring information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

E. F. B., New York.—Although perhaps allowable as a colloquialism, the sentence, "if the heat of the day continues, the thermometer will reach 100 degrees," is incorrect. The wrong use are made to govern "heat" and "thermometer;" and "degrees," lacking some qualifying word, might as well be dropped as expressing nothing more than the bare figures. 2000 are capable of doing more than the bare figures. 2000 are capable of doing when associated with the idea of a thermometer. Not having the space to spare, we cannot undertake to parse the sentence, as you request. It will probably be sufficient to point out that, should the heat simply continue, the thermometer, so far from reaching 100, or 160 degrees Fahrenheit, will not even record or indicate an increased temperature.

EXHIBITION, Baltimore.—The rules state that it shall be considered a match game if "nines of two contesting clubs be opposed to each other." In the cases you refer to this was not the case, as the pitchers and catchers of each club were changed. Zettlein and Malone playing on the Baltimore picked nine side. Consequently no regular match was played, and no forfeiture of the game was made. Neither can it exactly be regarded as an exhibition game in the meaning of the rules, as two club nines were not contesting.

SCRATCHING.—1. To make an underhand throw legal the ball must be delivered with the arm swinging forward below the shoulder. 2. If a striker, leaning forward over the base, hits a ball which rebounds and hits him in the face it is a foul ball. 3. The home-base stone on which the plate is not legal—should be set in the ground with its points pointing towards pitcher and catcher, and so that the outside lines are on the foul ball lines.

J. M. B., Baltimore.—The Mutuals cannot play a legal game with D. Allison in their nine until Oct 7, whether the Resolutes have disbanded or not. There is no rule, however. Addy has not played with the Philadelphia nine since May, and consequently his time was up in July. Hicks has not left the Mutuals, that we are aware of, but his broken arm will not allow him to play again this season.

W. C. S., New London.—Regulator was by imp. Bonnie Scotland, dam Easter by Endorser; 24 dam, Ellen Swigert by Zulwer; 3d dam, Cora by Trumpeter; 4th dam, Yellow Jacket by Albert; 5th dam by Union. Bonnie Scotland (imported) by Iago, dam Queen Mary by Gladiator; 2d dam by Pienipotentiary; 3d dam, Myrrha, by Sir Hercules. Endorser was by Wagner, dam Fanny G. by Margrave.

J. J. C., Read's Landing.—1. The "call-out" game can be played properly then, as though you were playing but eleven points up. 2. No point has precedence over another at cassino. 3. A player can contribute to the quarter's build if he has not the ball, but if he has made the contribution, he has still remaining in his hand a card of the same denomination as the build.

H. W., Cleveland.—The performer in the public show "Mystic Change" act like that done by John Morris, without being liable to legal prosecution, as he has purchased from the originator the right to perform the same in public performing the act in this country. 2. You could neither command an engagement nor any salary until you had made some reputation.

POKER, Chicago.—Our previous decision was correct. A was entitled to a sight for the $24, being all the money he had about him, and B could not rake down the whole of his raise, but could only call A's bet and raise it forth to the previous bet of $15. Had A borrowed to raise B, then he would have been compelled to borrow to call, or lose the pot.

W. F., Fort Fetterman.—The pay of enlisted men in the British army is for regiments of the line, fifteen pence per day; cavalry, one shilling per day; artillery, eighteen pence farthing per day; "Life Guards" and "Royal Blues," the Queen's household troops, twenty pence per day. Until nineteen years ago the pay of all the troops was twopence a day less.

WM. HANDLEY, Oswego.—Your parrot is evidently suffering from some kind of vermin which often troubles caged birds, and which cause it to pick its feathers out. Remedy: Cleanse her cage, by washing, at least once a week, and sprinkle a little snuff under her wings and in the places which trouble her. Also a bath twice a week.

S. E. P., Windsor.—If the game was pockets-and-caroms, A is right in maintaining that the red ball must remain off, and B's claim is correct that only in pocket game being one of caroms only, there were two object balls off the table, in which case the next striker is privileged to spot one of them.

FARO, Macon—1. The dealer must pay the call eight-nine at the rate of 4 to 1. 2. The player having called the turn 10 2 and 9 3 on two losing boxes, bets $5 on 10 8, and the player called it 10-6 (the cue box showing a 6), the dealer would have had to pay, as the money laid that way.

G. W. S., City by the Sea.—There is no officially recognized championship rules for amateur games. Some States have special rules. Your State should go by the Louisiana rules governing rifle and pistol championship contests. Write to Mr. Tracy, Lone Star Club, New Orleans.

BOSTON.—1. The Great Britain is a wooden steamer, and was built at Liverpool or Birkenhead, we believe; we do not know who own her at present. 2. As your opponent played out of his cards before you had scored 25 points, he discovered that he had six cards before playing, the dealer would have forfeited his deal.

BOONSBOROUGH.—In our opinion the name of a person celebrated in history and used as a title for a play cannot be copyrighted so as to prevent others from using it as a title for another play. It would be well in such cases to use an original second title, which could be protected against infringement.

G. B. A.—It was merely a legal exhibition game, as was the one he has met and Kelly Brothers in match in Baltimore and Philadelphia game, and this last game. In all three instances the clubs playing exchanged players so that nines of two contesting clubs were not opposed to each other as in a regular match.

S. F. A., Pine Bluffs.—1. Boston was by Timoleon, dam Sister to Purdaha, by imp. Glencoe, 2d dam Lady Alderman, by imp. Alderman. Timoleon was by Sir Archy, dam by imp. Saltram. He was not an imported horse. 2. Flora Temple never trotted a mile heat in 2:19¾; her fastest record is 2:19¾, made at Kalamazoo.

ALASKA, Cleveland.—The Scotch terrier differs widely from the Skye terrier; in shape he is more like the English terrier, and in the Skye's coat, which is not by any means rough and rather long, but wiry and stiff, and without the woolly appearance peculiar to the Skye dog.

J. W. K., St. Louis.—Goldsmith Maid's fastest time, 2:16¾, was made at Mystic Park, Boston, 2. Goldsmith Maid never trotted with a mate against Dexter; she trotted singly against him at Middletown, N. Y., May 16, 1867. 3. No.

ST. JOSEPH.—1. A player cannot go alone after his partner assists. 2. You cannot go alone with a partner you have passed, or a trump the making of which you have passed. Only the player who orders up, takes up, or makes the trump, can go alone at euchre.

HENRY B., Buffalo.—Your explanation might have better served its purpose had it been sent before the plagiarism was exposed. If Eugene F. connolly imposed upon you, he has also imposed upon the public, and should be exposed.

AN OLD ADMIRER, Lawrence.—1. They are imported from Europe. About $5,000 is the usual price. 2. $1,000. 3. Any importer of musical instruments could obtain them. 4. There is no book of instruction. One must be a thorough musician to be able to play them.

A. C. T., Jamestown.—You will have to furnish your own tights, boots, shoes, etc., for the place to purchase which see our advertising columns. Costumes will be furnished you from the wardrobe of the theatre.

DOUBLE SIX.—1. He is not compelled to trump the trick; he can throw away on it. 2. At poker dice, sixes and fives beat aces and deuces, because the former are the highest and the latter the lowest numbers on the dice.

CORRESPONDENT, Newark.—If it can be shown by the record of the two club scorers that the score was legally tallied by both of the Athletics at the end of the ninth inning, that decides the contest.

E. W. M., Philadelphia.—1. You cannot prevent that. 2. If you accept a statement of a bystander as to the decision of the referee you do so at your own risk. 3. Your opinion is that the referee erred in not giving you the money, for that reason. His decision is final, however.

M. B. BURNSIDE.—The Auburn, Syracuse, and Jack Howard's great jump was made at Chester, Eng. 3. Not having been present, we are unable to state. Weights are generally used, however.

HARRY ANDERSON.—1. At Mystic Park, Boston. 2. W. A. Doble, the father of Budd Doble, drove her on that occasion. 3. The jack counts. 4. She has gone to the breeding mill.

INQUIRER, Louisville.—1. All the sums mentioned are too small. 2. Yes. 3. They vary so much that we cannot satisfactorily answer you. From $50 to $150 per week will give you some idea.

MINSTREL, San Francisco.—If you have talent, consult some manager in person or correspond with one and solicit an engagement, and, if obtained, work hard to gain the eminence you covet.

OLD SPORT, Wheeling.—A loses his money. All bets must be decided by the record, and Longfellow has no record of 1:40. That time was taken by outsiders only, and not by the official timers.

FAIR.—1. By applying to the keeper of that institution. 2. We have no record of the names of the ladies appearing in the ballet of "The Black Crook" (save the principals), as they are never given out to the public.

OSCEOLA, Paterson.—"When a player over-runs first-base, can he be put out if the ball is passed to the pitcher and then back to the baseman who touches the base again after overrunning it?"... No; he is entitled to the base.

JOHN JOHNSON.—Don't know. Your other queries are of a character to be the choice of fancy only, as the game being one of caroms only, there were two object balls off the table, in which case the next striker is privileged to spot one of them.

FARO, Macon—1. The dealer must pay the call eight-nine at the rate of 4 to 1. 2. The player having called the turn 10 2 and 9 3 on two losing boxes, bets $5 on 10 8, and the player called it 10-6 (the cue box showing a 6), the dealer would have had to pay, as the money laid that way.

W. C. R., Baltimore.—1. The only license required would be in the town where the exhibition is given. 2. We do not know his address.

CONSTANT READER.—We do not in this department make comparisons of the relative merits of professional performers.

SAM SLICK, Chilicothe.—The band wagon of Spaulding & Rogers's circus was drawn by forty horses, the largest number, we believe, that were ever driven by one man.

ETTA ST. LEON, Kalamazoo.—We have a letter addressed to Belle St. Leon, which has been in our care for the past twelve months.

W. T. M., Rahway.—If the game was seven up, how could the players be eight each? The jack counts the moment it is turned, and before a card is played.

GILL.—I. S. P. Q. R. are the initials of the Latin words Senatus populus Romani que, which mean "The Senate and People of Rome." 2. Cannot say. 3. No. 4. No. 5 Yes.

J. H. C., Phila.—B, holding high and only wanting one point, and making the two he gave for the pitch, goes out before A.

A. S. M., Tallmadge.—The fact that B had $10 wins the bet. It is not necessary that he should have $10 extra for B to win a bet.

G. SILVEY, Newport, Ky.—One, if not more, will be used. You will succeed better by devoting your time to fewer subjects.

J. W. G., Austin.—All enlisted men are subject to the commands of their officers, and liable to the whole routine of military duty.

C. AND E., Baltimore.—We believe that there is neither an agent nor a recruiting office for them in this city at present.

BRANDENBURG AND GALICIA.—If the game was ten-up, and both players were eight each, then the buyer who gives three points for the pitch puts the seller out at once.

NOVICE.—Horses are eligible to trot in purse races in which their are entered, although they may have beaten the time of such purses subsequently to their entry.

J. G. W., St. Catharines.—A loses the money, as 40 was not beaten on the first throw. The throwing off of the 40 ties had nothing whatever to do with the bet.

SANDY.—Neither James Brooks nor Oakes Ames was expelled from Congress for their complicity in the Credit Mobilier affair.

N. F., Sunbury, Pa.—What symptoms do your dogs present? You may be mistaken in the disease. State fully how they are affected.

A. I., Chattanooga.—The money on the 9 is a bet, not a call, and if the 9 loses, the player loses also; if the 9 gains, he wins. It was not a legitimate call.

F. H., Kankakee.—Of course they can rule you out. It is simply a question whether they do that or see their game of pool broken up by your superior play. You lose.

SINGANG, Springfield.—A is wrong. Bonds have taken different names, had the largest held at many.

T., Chicago.—A is right, and B has no claim except for the money paid for the Reid ticket.

Reed, New York.—If Mr. Crawford's pacer Harry went against American Girl at Fleetwood this spring.

R. D.—The Crystal Palace, New York, was burned Oct. 5, 1858.

C. B., THE UNKNOWN.—Have matter in hand, and will answer next week.

S. G. L., Cleveland.—He is stuck. His not having had a shot at pin-pool does not exempt him.

HIGHLANDS.—It is a matter of opinion, as they are both leading powers.

GERMANTOWN.—We know nothing of the firm, further than that it advertised.

HATTER A., Sandy.—It has not been published in book-form.

R. B. C., Cleveland.—Bets are decided solely by the record. A, who bet that a mile has been run in less than 1:42¾, loses.

DETROIT.—Bill Lang ran a mile, part down hill, in 4min. 2sec.; he and Richards ran a dead heat, level ground, in 4:16½.

J. F., San Francisco.—1. We cannot give you the names of any breeders in Ireland; write to M. O'Rourke, Broadway, Saratoga, N. Y. 2. No record.

PLOUGH MAN, Delaran.—A had a right to the forfeit. C ought to have ascertained that the party he named was a voter before so doing.

TURNER.—We know nothing of any money matters in connection with the club in question—only that Wadsworth cannot legally play in the Easton nine until Oct. 7.

R.—The run counts if the home base was touched before the player was put out (in running to second) after the run was scored.

CONCORD.—He will manage his opera-house on Sixth avenue, near Twenty-third street, in this city, where he can be addressed.

KNABENFEX.—Having built your pile "eights," you cannot build it nine, nor can your opponent. It can only be taken by an 8.

E. F. F., Leavenworth.—1. At cassino, you can build two piles on the board at the same time. 2. We can send you a copy.

C. H., Chicago.—The points cannot be scored until all the cards are played. Both parties scoring out, the game is a stand-off.

D. H., Phila.—If you call your build "eights," then your opponent cannot build on it, and it can only be taken by an eight.

ROSE, Watertown.—Gloster was eligible in the 2:27 Purse at Buffalo, because he was entered for it prior to his trotting at Buffalo.

A CLIPPER READER.—We have not a score of an Atlantic game in 1855, there not being one on the club score-book.

C. F. L., Washington.—1. The item was too stale for THE CLIPPER. 2. Yes.

A READER.—Mooney's height then was the same as now—5 feet 11½ inches.

BEACH STREET.—An alien must reside here five years before he can procure naturalization papers.

A STRANGER, Albany.—You can purchase their arms at Schuyler, Hatfiel & Graham's, in Maiden lane.

JOE, Titusville.—We gladly welcome the reappearance of an old friend.

A. AND D., Troy.—We cannot truthfully bestow "merited praise" upon your poetic labors.

WM. E. M., Mobile, Ala.—We shall probably give it insertion in our next issue.

LINNE BOY.—Yes, as the third-base hit would have brought him home without any assistance from the errors.

C. L. F., Baltimore.—Thanks for your valued contribution to our list of old bills.

G. B. P., Charleston.—Contributions at hand—they will receive early attention.

E. S. MCC., Newark.—It was an accident, and could not be claimed as a fair croquet.

J. B., Duluth.—Subscription expires with No. 5, vol. 22; back numbers sent.

BEDFORD, Brooklyn.—1. We are already supplied. 2. Yes. 3. Cannot say.

J. L. R., Forest.—See dramatic summary of the present issue.

G. R., Williamsburg.—E. L. Davenport may be considered as one of the best. He was born in Boston, Mass.

GUS. WALLACK.—As it is evident you know nothing about the business, you had better abandon all idea of it.

C. K., Lewisville.—From $25 per week upward, according to reputation and ability.

W. A. D.—We do not answer questions by mail. We believe Dr. Bass has not yet retired.

SHAMBURG.—The stakeholder is not obliged to give up a disputed bet unless he receives a satisfactory guarantee.

W. D. F., Fort Wayne.—Thanks; but we already have a correspondent in your city.

COPPERFIELD, Wheeling.—Will give the matter consideration when we renew our correspondence.

J. B., Baltimore.—I cannot say, as we had no report of the performance. 2. You could not be interfered with.

J. K., Saluria.—We believe that neither is performing at present.

H. H. H., Phila.—A must play his hand, as there can be no mislead after the trump card is turned.

TOM SAWYER.—A creek or river in which Niagara falls on the Canadian than the American side of Niagara Falls.

G. E. B., Nebraska City.—Write to Sim D. Kehoe, who advertises.

HALL.—The bet is drawn.

S. D., Freeport.—Sixes.

H. V., St. Joseph.—No.

MACK.—No.

WHERE'S THE BOUQUET MAN?—There is likely to be an increased demand for bouquets, now it has become the fashion to throw them at individual members of the corps de ballet. It is probable, too, that the floral offerings intended for the "stars" will be of larger size than usual, and bear the names of their recipients. Perhaps it would be well were they also to bear the names of those who give them. There have been instances where the honor of presentation has been falsely claimed. Let justice be done the bouquet-slinger.

A DEAD SHOT.—Harvey A. Brown, the shootist who won the Lorillard medal at Saratoga, disdains to hold it. Mr. B. does not seem to have formed a very favorable opinion of his associate shooters at the Springs, and in disgust he throws up the trophy he won. He has probably discovered that in pigeon-shooting, as well as in rough-and-tumble fighting, there is a good deal of gouging; but yet, in the plaintive language of the poet, we might exclaim, in reference to the return of the medal, "It will never do to give it up so, Mr. Brown."

HOW THEY FIXED HIM.—At La Cynge, out in Kansas, a few days ago, a man named Kellar murdered his wife and two children and his wife's sister, and then burned their bodies. He was caught, but the authorities couldn't keep off the mob. The wires tell the rest of the sad story in these simple words: "The mob returned to La Cynge, where Kellar ate a hearty meal—then they took him out and hung him." Could anything be plainer?

THE HARVEST OF BLOOD continues. A few months ago the city was startled by the announcement of the murder of a father by his son. Now, a father has killed one of his sons, and placed in jeopardy the life of another. As in the case of young Walworth, we presume that swift vengeance will overtake Broderick. If not, why not?

IN SUFFERING KANSAS they have raised a colt with a perfectly-formed body, but with hind legs without joints and only six inches long. This sort of colt will not make a very good revolver.

"OLD PROBABILITIES" sailed for Europe on Saturday last. Who will care for weather now?

A MAN OF THE PEOPLE.—The Duke of Brunswick who died at Geneva, in Switzerland, on the 19th inst., was for many years noted as a frequenter of the London theatres, including the highest and the lowest. In most he had what is called the "free-dom" of the green-room, and was in the habit of conversing familiarly, not only with the actors, but even the "supes" and the scene-shifters. Whatever his sins might have been, arrogance was not among the number; and though once a sovereign prince, and being under the impression, to the last day of his life, that he had been wrongfully deprived of his dominions, he never seemed so happy as when mixing with what is known as "common humanity." He was a connoisseur in diamonds, and whenever he showed in public, was resplendent in those gems. He was, besides, a general sight-seer, and had a partiality for going up in balloons. In earlier life he was a man of magnificent personal appearance, and like his relatives, the Guelphs, had the germs of hereditary insanity within him.

AMERICAN ARTS.—American artists are at last beginning to be recognized and appreciated by Europe. At the Vienna Exposition Messrs. Duval & Hunter of Philadelphia exhibited some beautiful chromos, which attracted much attention and admiration. As a recognition of the artistic excellence of those chromos, Messrs. Duval & Hunter have been awarded a medal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ Being in a fault-finding mood, and seizing upon the neglect of his daughter to sew a suspender button upon his pantaloons as the pretext for a physical demonstration, Michael C. Broderick, a carman living at 81 Carmine street, in this city, was on Aug. 22 brought within the shadow of the gallows. While cursing his daughter for her neglect, he was remonstrated with by his mother-in-law, towards whom he had many times before manifested a feeling of deep hostility. Throwing a boot at her, Broderick, who was ugly from a night's dissipation, struck Mrs. Jane Brooks a severe blow on the eyeball, rendering her permanently blind. Broderick, who was ugly from a night's dissipation, struck Mrs. Jane Brooks a severe blow on the eyeball, rendering her permanently blind.

☞ A telegram from San Francisco, Cal., under date of Aug. 19, announces that all mail matter between Salmon Hill and Mokulumne City was stopped by two highwaymen, who robbed the passengers, took $4,000 from Wells, Fargo & Co.'s treasure box, and destroyed the mails, papers, and everything else of value. The robbers are known, and are being pursued.

☞ A collision on the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad, near Montgomery, on Aug. 21, caused the immediate death of three trainmen and the scalding of three others, one of whom has since died. It was brought about by a freight train, the engineer of which ran past his orders, and immediately ran away. If caught, they will be prosecuted for murder.

☞ Abram Benson, one of the prisoners who, in making their escape from Auburn Prison last March, killed Jailor Fields, escaped a second attempt on Aug. 19. He had got as far as the Canada line, and was on the point of crossing when he was fired at and mortally wounded by Watchman Michael Boyle.

☞ The village of Twine Spring, Kansas, reports a terrible tragedy as having occured there on Aug. 17. A man named Kellar, having killed his wife, his sister, and two children, piled their bodies upon the floor, and then, covering them with straw, set fire to the heap. He has since been lynched.

☞ At Salt Lake City, Utah, on Aug. 18, D. W. Grant, a saloon-keeper, and a prominent citizen, while being a unoffending citizen, was shot, and probably mortally wounded by Benjamin Maynard, who hails from the Pacific Slope, where he is known as Big Ben and as an undesirable neighbor.

☞ Returning home from his work, on Aug. 20, John Yeager, a carpenter, residing on the corner of Gilman and Ashland streets, New Orleans, found his wife lying dead in the yard, with eight buckshot wounds in her breast and left arm. No clue.

☞ The Hilton lubricating oil works in Chelsea, Mass., were burned on Aug. 21, along with their contents; and on the night of the 20th, A. H. Hughes & Co.'s pottery in North Cambridge was burned, the loss being $8,000, fully covered by insurance.

☞ An incendiary set fire on Aug. 22 to several frame buildings on Division, Ky. One was occupied by a family of a negro named Lewis were consumed, and Lewis himself was so badly burned that recovery is almost out of the question.

☞ Mary Ellen Burns, colored, has commenced a civil suit in the Scott Co., Ky., Circuit Court, against Benjamin Osborne, for the murder of her husband. Osborne, who is wealthy, is already been committed, without bail, to answer for murder.

☞ In the case of Ann Eliza Webb vs. Brigham Young, Judge Emerson on Aug. 22 decided that the Court has no jurisdiction, and the case has accordingly been dismissed. It will be brought up again in October next.

☞ The Colored State Convention at Charlottothe, O., have resolved that colored people are politically oppressed, and they rebuke "the party which made them voters" for fancying that it has a claim upon the negro vote.

☞ At Washington, D. C., Aug. 22, Benjamin Uncle fired three shots, without effect, at a man named McCarty, who with a fowling-piece answered back, instantly killing Uncle, falling across a fence.

☞ Sundry of the Newgate Prison officials have been arrested upon a charge of having received a bribe of £100 apiece to connive at the escape of the Bank of England forgers.

☞ The late battle between the Pawnee and the Sioux Indians came off on the 13th, in a force of 100 men, women and children, and a large quantity of buffalo meat and hides.

☞ A freight and an excursion train collided near Retford station, not far from Nottingham, Eng., on or about Aug. 23, killing four persons and injuring fifteen others, several of them fatally.

☞ A fire at Belfast, Me., Aug. 24, destroyed all the prominent wharf buildings but three, and rendered at least one hundred and thirty families houseless. Loss, $300,000.

EXTRA MEETING AT LONG BRANCH.

FIRST DAY, SATURDAY, AUG. 23.

BLIND TOM WINS THE HURDLE RACE, THE JESSAMINE POKER COLT THE LONG BRANCH HANDICAP, NEW NORMANDIE TROT AND PACE, AND SUSIE THE MILE-AND-A-HALF RACE.

The extra race meeting given by the Monmouth Park Association for the entertainment of the numerous visitors temporarily sojourning at Long Branch commenced on Saturday, the 23d inst., having been postponed three days on account of unfavorable weather. The day was delightfully fine, and the attendance large. The track was in much better order for running than could have been expected. It dried very rapidly under the sun's rays, and the going was pretty fair when the bell rang to summon the horses for which had the novel feature of being at mile heats, over four hurdles. Five horses entered and started, and were sold in pools at the subjoined rates:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Revenge | $160 | $200 | $100 |
| Village Blacksmith | 150 | 150 | 55 |
| Blind Tom | 55 | 75 | 46 |
| Impecunious | 26 | 20 | 15 |
| Harry Booth | 24 | 24 | 13 |

First Heat.—Blind Tom was first away when the drum was tapped, with Village Blacksmith and Impecunious next, but before the first hurdle was reached Impecunious rushed to the front, and leaped it a length before Village Blacksmith, Blind Tom being third, Revenge fourth, and Harry Booth last. Pepper immediately rushed Revenge to the front, and made the running at a hot pace, with a view of cutting down the opposition as much as possible at Saratoga the week before. The Blacksmith, Impecunious and Harry Booth followed in hot pursuit, while Gaffney settled patiently behind with Blind Tom, in confident assurance the other horses would "come back" to him before the mile was traveled and the hurdles jumped. Revenge led over the second hurdle, closely followed by Impecunious, Village Blacksmith and Harry Booth; Blind Tom a few lengths behind. On the backstretch Village Blacksmith deprived Revenge of the lead, as did also Impecunious and Harry Booth; George Pepper taking a pull at his horse so as to keep company with Blind Tom, the horse he most feared in the race. In this order the third hurdle on the lower turn was taken by all the horses, but as they turned into the homestretch Gaffney took Blind Tom through on the outside, and, with a rush, soon left the others in the rear. When over the leap, Gaffney brought up Blind Tom with a brilliant rush, passed the two leaders, and, leaving them no room, quickly opened a length lead, which he increased at the heat by five lengths; Village Blacksmith second two lengths before Revenge, and Harry Booth last. Time, 1:59.

Second Heat.—Blind Tom was now next to the last, settling in the pools for $128; Revenge (thought by his backers not to have gone for the first heat) for $80, and Impecunious, Harry Booth and Village Blacksmith, bunched at $40, for $80. The same positions took the lead at the start of the drum, followed in order by Revenge, Blind Tom and the Blacksmith; Harry Booth hanging at the post, and getting his horse well in hand. Revenge was next to the Revenge went in front, and knocked it flat down as he jumped it, leaving the road free for his followers. Revenge quickly opened a wide gap, and at the second hurdle he was four lengths in front of Village Blacksmith, who was half that distance before the favorite, whose tactics in the previous heat were evidently fresh in his mind, and won." On the backst

GOOD FOR THE MAJOR.—We have received official notification, in the shape of a note signed by Commissioner George Hall, that the result of an examination of seven athletes by the International Jury at Vienna, Austria, has been the award of an elegant medal to Major James H. McLaughlin, the celebrated American wrestler, as the best formed, proportioned and muscular specimen of the human form divine. His height is 6 feet 3 inches, and his weight 225lbs. His many friends will join us in congratulating him upon his enviable fortune.

"THEM SPORTS."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Those sportive youths, Sammy and Pete,
Had drunk too much of wine;
And so, in rolling through the street,
Could hardly keep a line.

A "hill" would rise before them here,
And there a gulf would be—
Accordingly they both would "steer"
With muttered ha! and ho!

At last a lamppost right or wrong'd
With all their drunken might;
And, throwing back their heads, they fac'd
The dazzling, burning light.

Says Sammy, "Pete (hic), wha's is that?
(Hic) the morning star so soon?"
Says Pete, "I'll eat my (his) old hat,
If 'taint the (hic) new moon!"

"New moon!" says Sam, "I bets it aint!
Guess (his) you mus' be right!"
Says Pete, "No (hic), I bets I haint;
Beta drinks Gold I am right!"

At this point of their tough dispute
Another "sport" came by;
And both agreed that this "galoot"
Should stop and "try his eye."

Now this "galoot" was tight, also,
As either Sam or Pete,
And had hard work, as he did go,
To keep upon his feet.

"Say, boss," says Sam, "hol' up a while:
Say (his), wha's that thing like?"
"Taint no moon (hic), I bets my pile—
(Hic) damn 'f 'taint a star!"

The "sport" raised up his eyes on high,
And look'd that gaslight through:
"I don't know," said he, with a sigh,
"I'm strange in this town, too!" L. T.

A STORY OF THE CIRCUS.

AS TOLD BY AN OLD CLOWN.

Well, your see, sir, it seems to be one of them things as won't wear out. It's a thing as attracts children and grown people, too—people with young ideas, you know; and as it isn't likely that children will ever wear out—I mean the custom of having children—why, it isn't likely as circuses will ever go down. Why, how the old country people now talk about going up to London to see the sights; why, what's the thing that they always recklects best? Why, isn't it about going to "Hastley's?" To be sure it is; and some of 'em will talk to you for long enough about Mr. Hastley and Madame Ducrow and her cream ponies, and about Miss Woolford pitching off her horse on her head, and then about the fire, and Batty and Cook, and all the rest of it. And I don't care, Summer or Winter, wet or dry, whenever we go with our troupe into a country town, there is always an audience.

Nothing takes like a circus; and ours takes better than anybody's, I can tell you. I am only an understrapper now, you know; but the guvnor did the right thing by me, and of course I do the right thing by him. You see, we always makes a good finish in the shape of well-billing the places we're going to, for it doesn't do to be stingy in that way, and the guvnor has some spicy affairs of transparencies, and wonderful jumping, and all the colors that catch the eye; while for the shop windows there's some lithographs of the performing horses, and the elephant, for the Gutta Percha Brothers tied in a human knot, while everyone who exhibits them has a ticket for free admission.

But it's a queer life, sir, and one not to be envied; only, you see, you must live; and when there's a wife and some little ones, why, of course they must live, too; and having been in the profession all my life, why, it doesn't seem as if I could do anything out.

There, now, then, them's two of mine coming into the ring now. First one's eleven and t'other's nine. "The Flying Twins!" we calls 'em in the bill, and they don't do amiss for their size. Pitch a summerset easy, either of 'em. There they go, you see; and after another year or two's eddication they'll be a great help to the family, besides having a profession of their own, to make 'em independent when they won't stop in the nest any longer. All they've got to do is to keep clear of their father's accident, for get a hipjoint put out as I did, and the country doctor to say it was a strain and never put it up till too late—get in for an accident like that, by tumbling on an orange-peel and slipping when running for a jump, then it's a doer-up for life, as with me.

But it's a queer life, sir. No rest, no comfort, no peace at all. Public houses always, and say, now, here's to-day; long distance to come, and had to start early; then here in good time there was time to dress and take part in the procession at one o'clock. Two o'clock, you know, was the afternoon performance. That was over about four, and then, of course, there was to begin again at half-past seven. Well, and nobody knows what a bath means but them as has been in it, what being about in the cold, wet weather is—dressing and undressing in a canvas tent, with the wind cutting through, and then hopping over the mud to get into the damp ring, when you're ready to shiver as you slip about, if the weather has been very bad. Well, you get part through, and then, in comes out of ten, what sort of a place have you to go into? Why, one where there's no rest for you on account of it's being a busy night because of the circus, and the house full. So p'r'aps you get an hour or two's sleep, p'r'aps not, according to circumstances.

As for me, you know, I'm one of the tent men; for though one leg shorter than the other makes me limp a good deal, I'm strong, you know, and my job is to see the tent up. You've noticed us strike it as fast as ever we can as soon as the performance is nearly over; dropping the outside, and taking down the cloth curtains that divide the sixpences from the shillings. Well, there's a deal to do over that, I can tell you; for look at the weight of the great tent, and its pole and ropes; besides which, it's most always a-wet when it comes off, and so much heavier than it was dry.

I think sometimes as we have least rest of anyone; but then we take it in turns, and sleep in the wagon going from town to town, and that's very refreshing, when once you get used to it. At first, you know, it's decidedly rheumatic, and makes you very queer, but you soon get used to it, and I stand anything now worse, poor things, but they seldom grumble, and puts up with everything most patient—no matter what it is; and they have some hard times of it when the weather's bad.

You people come to see and be amused, and we've got to amuse you. Fancy, then, being the clown and coming on with a bad toothache, or a violent cold in the chest, or racked so with rheumatic pains that every moment's agony. Just fancy all that in a cold Spring time, which is the time you feel the cold most. But, there, you can't fancy it, you people who always have a comfortable house and fire ers won easily, their opponents breaking an oar. Distance, 1¼ miles; time, 7:30. The winning quartet were Henry Preston, bow; R. H. Johnston, J. H. Hutchinson, H. M. Long, stroke.

THE CHARLESTOWN, MASS., YACHT CLUB held their fourth annual regatta off Long Island, Aug. 18. Twelve boats participated and the winners were as follows: First-class keels, Mystery and Doion; centre-boards, Lilly and Napoleon; second-class, Bull Bow and Odd Fellow.

J. H. SADLER is out in a challenge to row the winner of the race between Harry Kelley and Robt. Bagnell, in open boats, from Putney to Mortlake, on the Thames, Eng., allowing £10 expenses.

MICHAEL AHERN AND T. F. BUTLER, Jr., pulled an impromptu race of about three-quarters of a mile on the Charles River, at Boston, Mass., Aug. 16, the former winning by about two lengths.

M. SULLIVAN defeated R. Shalo, O. G. Evans, R. White and J. O'Neil in a scullers' race for $50 at Boston, Mass., Aug. 19. The distance was 1¼ miles.

J. C. COLE, JR., of Brunswick and C. M. Henry of Portland, Me., are matched to row two miles, for $250 a side, at Portland, Sept. 9.

THE SPRINGFIELD RACES.

FIRST DAY, TUESDAY, AUG. 19.

CLEMENTINE WINS THE 2:34 PURSE, ST. JAMES THE 2:26.

During the past week the seventh annual trotting meeting of the Hampden Park Association was held at Springfield, Mass. A rainstorm prevailed on the 18th, placing the track in anything but good condition for the opening next day, and from appearances on the morning of the 19th it was feared that the managers were doomed to meet with the same ill-fortune as attended the Utica Meeting. Luckily, however, the threatening clouds began to break about noon without discharging their contents, and at two o'clock the weather was very pleasant, and people began to congregate at the Park. The number of spectators present is stated to have been greater than upon any opening day in previous years. The sport began with a tret for horses of the 2:34 class, for a purse of $3,000, ten starters out of fifteen entries, viz.: Clementine, Walter, Goldleaf, Barney Kelly, Rowe's Tommy, Stewart Maloney, Jubilee Lambert, George Miller, Chestnut Billy and Idol Girl. The absentees were Fearnaught, Jr., Arthur, Manhattan, Falmouth and Hamilton. Clementine was a strong favorite for this event, bringing $25 in the pools to $9 for the field. Goldleaf held the lead from start to close in the first heat, closely pursued by Walter, who was but a neck behind at the finish. Time, 2:31½. Notwithstanding that the favorite made such a poor display, she was still first choice at odds of over two to one against the field. After a couple of false starts the word "go!" was given; but at the same instant the bell was rung, causing confusion and inducing six of the drivers to turn back, those who continued being the pilots of Walter, Barney Kelly, Rowe's Tommy and Jubilee Lambert. The former held the lead all through, winning in 2:37¼. The judges decided it a heat, but said that under the circumstances they would not distance those horses which returned. The other three heats were cleverly taken by the favorite, who led nearly all the way in each. Summary:

HAMPDEN PARK ASSOCIATION FALL MEETING, Springfield, Mass.—First Day, Aug. 19, 1873.—Purse $3,000, for horses that have never trotted better than 2:34; $1,500 to first, $750 to second, $450 to third, $300 to fourth.

Greater interest was taken in the 2:26 race, for a purse of $5,000, for which there were fifteen entries, but Brother Jonathan, Gloster, Comet, Notsie, Clara G. and Fred. Hooper were withdrawn, leaving as starters St. James, Blanche, Young Bruno, Parkes' Abdallah, Lucille Golddust, J. G. Brown, Confidence, Ben Flagler and Prince Allen. Poolselling was lively upon this race, with St. James as first choice, J. G. Brown second, Blanche third. It was only after nine false starts had been made that the word was given to a tolerably even send-off, the favorite in the van, where he remained until the goal was reached, though Young Bruno made the pace hot on the homestretch, being beaten to the score by a head only. Time, 2:26¾. In the next heat St. James led from the quarter pole, Blanche second, and Bruno third, but going around the backstretch the latter gained second place through Blanche breaking. On the homestretch the positions of second and third were again reversed, while St. James went under the wire a length ahead of Blanche, who had just a trifle the best of Bruno. Great odds were now offered by the backers of St. James, but few were found willing to take them, his chances being now too good to bet against. He went to the fore at once in the third heat, and at the quarter pole was leading by two lengths, Bruno second, Blanche well up. The latter did some splendid trotting in the third heat, gaining second place before reaching the half-mile pole, partly through a bad break on the part of Bruno, and on the homestretch carrying the favorite off his feet, winning by less than a foot in 2:26. Allen, Flagler and Confidence were now withdrawn, leaving but six to contest the fourth heat, in which Abdallah led at the start, but was soon passed by the favorite, who went by the quarter-pole first, Bruno second, Abdallah third, Blanche fourth. The latter followed Bruno's example by breaking on the final quarter, St. James passing under the wire ahead. Time, 2:27. Summary:

SAME DAY.—Purse No. 2, $5,000; for horses that had never beaten 2:26; mile heats, three in five, in harness; $2,500 to the winner, $1,250 to the second, $750 to the third, and $500 to the fourth.

SECOND DAY, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 20.

SENSATION WINS THE 2:21 PURSE—WINTHROP MORRILL, JR., THE 2:31 RACE.

With a far better track than on the opening day, delightful weather and a largely augmented attendance, the second day's races passed off most satisfactorily to spectators and managers. The 2:21 class was first on the card, Sensation, Judge Fullerton and Camors contending for the purse of $6,000, Gloster, John W. Conley and Gazelle were withdrawn. Eleven attempts were made before the horses got off, Sensation then going away with the lead, Camors second, and Fullerton, who had sold as first choice, last. The latter left his feet going around the turn, and fell farther behind, while Camors was close upon the leader at the quarter-pole and got upon even terms with him as they flew along the backstretch. After passing the three-quarters Camors forged slightly ahead, but the driver of Sensation urged him to greater speed, and, regaining the foremost position, he passed under the wire half a length to the good. Time, 2:23½. Fullerton broke repeatedly, and was unable, even by running, to save his distance. Some of those present seemed impressed with the belief that this bad performance by the favorite was the result of a previous arrangement, and his driver was greeted with hisses as he came in. Sensation was again first away in the second heat, but went off his feet just after starting, and was passed by Camors, who soon opened a gap of a couple of lengths, which lead he still held as they entered the last quarter. Now, however, Sensation began to close upon him, but was unable to approach nearer than one length, with which advantage Camors crossed the score. Time, 2:25½. They were sent away well together in the third heat, but before reaching the quarter pole Sensation had obtained a lead of two lengths, Camors having broken. At the half, however, the latter lapped his opponent, and was head and head with him at the three-quarter pole, but on the homestretch Sensation shook him off and flew across the score two lengths in the van. Time, 2:25. The winner was driven by Dan Mace, instead of Ben, in this heat. At the second attempt they were off evenly in the fourth heat, Sensation being now a hot favorite. Camors at once sped to the front, led by half a length at the quarter, and by two lengths at the half mile; but thenceforward Sensation gained upon him, being but half a length in the rear at the three-quarter-pole. Up the homestretch they trotted grandly, Sensation continuing to gain inch by inch, and as they neared the goal Camors was forced off his feet by the great pace at which they were going, the favorite beating him across the line a scant length. Time, 2:23¾. Summary:

SAME DAY, August 20.—Purse $6,000, for horses that had never trotted better than 2:21; $3,000 to first, $1,600 to second, $800 to third, $600 to fourth; mile heats, three in five, in harness.

Time, 2:23½; 2:25½; 2:25; 2:23¾.

Next on the day's programme was the 2:31 race, for a purse of $6,000, which had eight starters out of thirteen entries, viz.: Ohio Boy, Commodore, Col. Moulton, Barnard, Kelley, Penobscot, Morrill, Belle Brandon and Henry. Those who failed to start were Heather Bloom, Plato, Strideaway, Annie Collins and Redwing. In the pool-selling Morrill was the favorite, Commodore selling for second choice and Ohio Boy third. Several ineffectual attempts were followed by a good send-off, Ohio Boy showing ahead at once, and at the quarter being two lengths in the van, Penobscot second, and the favorite fifth. The Boy led throughout, though losing a little by breaking on the homestretch, winning the heat in 2:31. The style in which Ohio Boy had done his work in the inaugural heat had the effect of placing him at the top of the heap in the betting market. He was first to push his nose in front after being signaled to go the second time, but while spinning around the turn left his feet and took a back seat, leaving Penobscot and Moulton to contend for the lead, which the latter secured, after a severe struggle, at the half mile. Ohio Boy caught and passed him on the final quarter, however, but on the homestretch he broke for the third time, running over the score, for which he was put back to third position, Moulton being given the heat, with Barney Kelley second. Time, 2:31½. Kelley was in front at the start for the third heat, but broke immediately afterwards, and Moulton assumed the first position, the Boy being second and Commodore third at the quarter pole. The latter left his feet soon afterwards, but quickly recovered and, passing the Boy, collared Moulton on the fourth quarter, carrying him off his feet on the homestretch and gaining first place, which he maintained to the end, Ohio Boy second. Time, 2:30½. The start for the fourth heat was good, several of the contestants breaking shortly afterward, and Ohio Boy holding the lead at the quarter pole. This he managed to keep until the finish, though doing considerable breaking and running, Kelley second and Commodore third, these horses having pressed the winner closely all the way. Time, 2:33. At the second attempt a first-rate start was effected, the horses going to the quarter pole bunched, with Commodore leading slightly, Ohio Boy and Morrill next. These relative positions remained unaltered until after entering the homestretch, when the three mentioned, with Kelley, were on even terms and so crossed the line, all running. It was declared a dead heat between them by the judges, who ruled out Penobscot, Brandon and Henry because they had not won one heat in five. Commodore led at the quarter in the next heat, Ohio Boy, who had again broken, close up. They both left their feet on the second quarter, but maintained their positions until nearing the three-quarters, when Morrill went to the fore and passed under the string ahead. Time, 2:35½. It was beginning to get dark when they were called up for the seventh heat, in which they got off without trouble, and evenly, Morrill showing ahead at the quarter pole, closely followed by Kelley, who succeeded in obtaining the first place after going by the three-quarter pole. He kept there until the outcome, winning the heat in 2:38. A postponement was now necessitated until next day, and as rain fell on that date, the finish of the contest had to go over until the 22d.

Though the rain had ceased, the track was wet and soggy, especially on the backstretch, and it was decided to again postpone the regular races; but as some of the horses engaged in this race had to leave town, the managers ordered that it be finished. Just before the send-off the clouds opened again and the rain descended in torrents for a few minutes, half covering the track with water. It then changed from a hard shower into a steady, persistent northeast downfall, which promised to continue all day; but as the owners made no objection, it was resolved to go on with the race. At the eleventh attempt the five competitors were given the word to a poor start, Ohio Boy to the fore, Commodore second, Morrill third and Kelley last. The Boy leaving his feet on the quarter-stretch, he was passed by Morrill, who led at the pole, with Commodore second, the Boy third. Save that Morrill had increased his lead to three lengths, these relative positions were kept to the half-mile pole; but before reaching the three-quarters, Ohio Boy had taken second place and reached Morrill's wheel, Commodore a short length behind. Going around the turn on the last quarter the latter resumed the second position, and entered the stretch with his nose at Morrill's flank. He was not equal to the task before him, however, for the leader quickened his speed, drew away again, and went under the string two lengths to the good. Time, 2:34. The Boy was three lengths behind, and Moulton failed to save his distance. The betting, which had been in favor of Ohio Boy at odds of $100 to $75 against the field, now changed, Morrill selling for $46, Ohio Boy for $10, and the field for $9. Nine false starts were made before they got away for the ninth heat, Kelley then having a lead of half a length, the others bunched. The favorite had the lead at the quarter, the Boy next and Kelley third, and in this order they passed the half-mile, barring that Commodore had half a length the best of Kelley, the Boy being but a head behind Morrill and three lengths behind the others. Barney and Commodore gained considerably in the next quarter, and the horses swung into the homestretch bunched, Morrill leading Commodore a scant length, while the Boy was head-and-head almost with the latter, Kelley lapping both. It was a magnificent race until the close, and excited the spectators to a high pitch, especially when Kelley, with a surprising burst of speed, rushed by the others and snatched victory by a short head from Morrill, who was a quarter of a length before the Commodore. A finer or more closely-contested heat was never trotted upon this course, and the delighted spectators loudly cheered. Time, 2:36½. Each of the contestants had now won two heats except Commodore, and it was a moral certainty that another heat would tell the tale. Morrill sold in the pools for $100 to $80 against the field. He and Commodore got off evenly a head before the others in the tenth heat, the former taking the lead going around the turn, while Ohio Boy gave Commodore the shake just afterward, and was pressing the leader closely at the quarter, but, making up, he fell back, still retaining second place, however. He had regained his lost ground when half the distance had been covered, while Commodore was then lapping him. Going along the backstretch, where the track was a liquid sea of mud and water, Morrill had the advantage and increased his lead, while the Boy broke badly and Commodore took second place. As they entered the stretch on the final quarter, the last-named was within a length of the leader, and with the Boy pressed Morrill very hard, but without avail, as he trotted with great steadiness and won the heat in 2:37½. This decided the race in his favor, Barney Kelley taking second money, Ohio Boy third and Commodore fourth. Summary:

SAME DAY AND 22D.—Purse No. 4, $4,000, for horses that had never beaten 2:31; mile heats, three in five, in harness; $2,000 to the first, $1,000 to the second, $600 to the third and $400 to the fourth.

TROTTING AT WILKESBARRE, PA.

A three-days' trotting meeting was held at Lee Park, Wilkesbarre, Pa., last week, commencing on the 20th inst., with the race for the Lee Cup and $50, for horses owned in the county who had never trotted before. The race was won by Joseph Stickney's horse Billy in 2:40¾, 2:45 and 2:45. The second race was for a purse of $500 for horses who had never beaten 2:54. Eighteen horses started. John S. Baker's b g Daniels won the race, taking the third, fourth and fifth heats in 2:39, 2:35 and 2:34. The third race was for $800, for horses who had never trotted better than 2:37. There were five starters. Dinah, of Philadelphia, won in three straight heats. Time, 2:40; 2:38, and 2:36.

On the next about the same number of persons—between 3,000 and 4,000—were present. The first race was for colts 5 years old and under, for a purse of $200—$100 to the first, $50 to the second, $30 to the third and $20 to the fourth. There were four entries, bus only three started. The race was won by Eddie, a br g from Phillipsburg, N. J. He took the first, third and fourth heats in 2:30¾; 2:48; 2:51. The next race was a 2:50 race for a purse of $500; $250 to the first horse, $125 to the second, $75 to the third, and $50 to the fourth. Seventeen horses started, and five heats were trotted. The b g Daniels, owned by J. S. Baker of Seneca Falls, took the third, fourth and fifth heats in 2:34; 2:35; 2:38¾. The third race was a 2:34 race for a purse of $800; $400 to the first, $200 to second, $120 to third, and $80 to fourth. Six horses started. The first heat was won by Spotted Colt, the second by Norwood, and the third, fourth and fifth by Star, owned in Philadelphia; the time for each respectively being 2:33½; 2:36; 2:33½; 2:34; 2:38. The last heat was not finished until it was almost too dark to see the horses, and rain was falling slightly.

With an increased attendance, fine weather and a good track, the meeting closed on the 22d inst. The first purse was one of $200, for horses that never trotted better than three minutes; $100 to the first, $50 to the second, $30 to the third and $20 to the fourth. There were ten entries and eight horses started. The first two heats were won by Lena B. in 2:43¼ and 2:44; the third by Lady Dexter in 2:43; the fourth, fifth and sixth by Dick in 2:42; 2:44, and 2:54. The 2:46 race was for a purse of $500; $250 to the first, $125 to the second, $75 to the third, and $50 the fourth. There were eleven entries, but only eight horses started. Mollie Clark sold as first choice in the pools, and won in three straight heats. Time, 2:37½; 2:35, and 2:34. Five entries were made for the third and last race, and four horses trotted. The purse was $800; $400 to the first horse, $200 to the second, $120 to the third, and $80 to the fourth. Tom Keeler, owned by John I. Baker of Seneca Falls, won in three straight heats. Time, 2:30½; 2:30, and 2:29. Spotted Colt took second prize, and William H. Allen third.

THE UTICA RACES.

FOURTH AND LAST DAY, AUG 18.

Like those of the previous week, the closing races of the Utica (N. Y.) Park Association's Annual Meeting were trotted in the midst of a nasty, drizzling rainfall. The attendance was small and very little interest was manifested in the races, summaries of which we present below:

UTICA (N. Y.) PARK ASSOCIATION'S ANNUAL MEETING.—Fourth and last day, Aug 18.—Purse $3,000; for horses that had never beaten 2:38; mile heats, best three in five, in harness; $1,500 to the winner, $750 to the second herse, $450 to the third, and $300 to the fourth.

PURCHASE OF BROODMARES FOR AMERICA.—At the recent sale of the racing stud of Sir Joseph Hawley and William Day, in England, Mr. Pierre Lorillard of this city, through an agency, bought two finely-bred mares for his stud. These were Asterope, foaled in 1867, by Asteroid out of Madame Eglantine, by Cowl (the dam of Rosicrucian), for 800 guineas; and the other, Maid of Athol, by Blair Athol, dam Tunstall Maid. Asterope has a filly foal by Beadsman at her foot, and has been stinted this Spring to Toxophilite.

EMERY'S FEARNAUGHT defeated Palmer Knox in a match for $1,000 trotted at the Forest City Trotting Park, Portland, Me., Aug. 21. Time, 2:46½; 2:46; 2:41.

RACING AND TROTTING NOTES.

Messrs. Kurr and Murray, two English horse-dealers, are now in this country making large purchases of fast trotting horses for the foreign market. They have purchased extensively at Albany, Buffalo, Philadelphia and New York.....J. W. Pennock's four-year-old Brother to James A. Connolly has sprung a tendon on his near fore leg, and fears are entertained that he has broken down.....The managers of the New England Agricultural Society have offered $4,300 in purses to be trotted for at their Fair held at Mystic Park, Medford, Mass., on Sept. 2, 3, 4 and 5.....An association of breeders and owners of trotting horses for the improvement of the trotting stock of the State has recently been formed in Lexington, Ky., under the title of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association. Hon. T. J. McGibben was elected president; and Messrs. W. H. Wilson and H. T. Duncan, Jr., secretary and treasurer respectively.....The fast-trotting stallion Sentinel, owned by Mr. Edwin Thorne of Dutchess Co., N. Y., who recently refused $30,000 for him, was found dead in his stable at Ashgrove Farm, near Lexington, Ky., last week. He was by Ryadick's Hambletonian, dam Lady Patriot, and consequently a full brother to Alden Goldsmith's Volunteer, the sire of Huntress, Gloster, W. H. Allen and other famous fast trotters, and he gave great promise as a sire himself, his colts that were dropped in Kentucky this season being highly prized.....The Westchester County Agricultural Society holds its Twenty-ninth Annual Fair at White Plains on Sept. 11, 12 and 13.....The famous racehorse Muggens, who won the Saratoga Cup in 1867, when four years old, carrying the crushing weight of 118lb, and running the two and a quarter miles in 4:06, is offered for sale for $2,000.....A five-mile trotting match for $1,000 has been made between a horse owned by Frank Malone, by Lodi out of Arnold's mare, and a mare owned by C. Horstman, by John Nelson out of the Longboy mare, to take place at Agricultural Park, San Francisco, on the 6th prox.....It is stated that the Chickasaw Jockey Club of Memphis, Tenn., will not give a race meeting this fall, owing to the race-course being controlled by the Agricultural Society, who purpose giving two Fairs upon it this season.....Belle of Watertown, the well-known black trotting mare, has been sold by Mr. Truman A. Warren of this city to a gentleman from Iowa for $11,000.....A son of Mr. L. L. Dorsey, the Kentucky breeder of the Golddust trotting stock, while suffering from aberration of mind, recently committed suicide in Cleveland, O., by jumping from a window in the Forest City Hotel, a height of 50 feet, killing himself almost instantaneously.....Capt. Wm. Cottrill of Mobile, Ala., is still pursued by that persistent illluck in turf matters which for years has been proverbial among racing men. While at Saratoga, he received intelligence that another of his broodmares, Mollie Ingersoll, by Daniel Boone, dam Sigma by Lexington, has died of the epizootic, and two or three days afterwards, his promising three-year-old chesnut filly Alice Mitchell, by Planet out of Volga, who had won the Western Hotel Stakes at Long Branch at the last July Meeting, died of inflammation of the lungs at Saratoga.....The trotting horse Sensation, who won the Free-for-all Purse at Buffalo last month, and Lake Fullerton and others, was sold by Mr. J. H. Smith of Portland, Me., to New York parties for $10,000.....The Orange County Pleasure Grounds Association will hold their annual meeting at Middletown, N. Y., on Aug. 27, 28, and 29, when purses amounting to $6,500 will be given.....The three-year-old gray gelding Brennus, by Lightning out of Brenna, purchased by Mr. David Lydig of this city, after winning a selling race at the Jerome Park Meeting, died of lung fever at Saratoga; he was in Dr. Weldon's stable.....Mr. Lefevre, the well-known French turfman, has entered the unparalleled number of fifteen horses out of his own stable in the Cambridgeshire and Newmarket October handicaps; fourteen in the Ceasarewitch and eleven in the Great Eastern Handicap. He has over one hundred and fifty horses in training.....Mr. Belmont, the president of the American Jockey Club, returns from England on Sept. 6, in time to be present at the Jerome Park Fall Meeting.....At the recent Lewes race meeting, in England, thirteen two-year-olds started in a selling race, which was won by a filly named Bonnets of Blue, entered to be sold for $250. She was put up at auction, and there was such competition for her that her owner bought her in for $3,150; the owner of the second horse and the race fund dividing the surplus, $2,900, between them.....A new stake, the most valuable on the American turf, was opened during the Saratoga Meeting at a dinner party of prominent turfmen held at the Lake. It is called the Breckenridge Stakes, for three-year-olds, $600 entrance, and is to be run over the Maryland Jockey Club Course on the last day of the Fall Meeting in 1874; distance two miles. It will close on October 1, the following gentlemen having already subscribed: Governor Bowie, F. Morris, H. P. McGrath, J. A. Grinsted, J. A. Morris, J. H. Reynolds, M. H. Sanford and J. F. Chamberlin.....Lovell Purdy, an old horseman of this city, died here recently in his seventieth year. He was the first president of the first jockey club organized in this section.....Mr. J. V. Caldwell has sold his young trotting mare Mila Caldwell, with a record of 2:27, made at Dexter Park, Chicago, at the July Meeting, to Mr. J. L. Case of Racine, Wis., for $10,000. The same gentleman also gave Mr. Townsend of Shullsburg, Wis., $10,000 for his trotting colt Star.....The four-year-old racer Bazaine, by Asteroid out of Laura White, by Glencoe, purchased by Sheriff Powell of Ottawa, Canada, from Mr. Robinson of Lexington, Ky., died recently of inflammation of the bowels.

THE CARLTON RACES.

The Summer meeting of the Carlton Turf Club was held at Toronto, Canada, Aug. 18 and 19, and was very well attended, particularly on the first day, when fully three thousand spectators were upon the grounds, including the Governor and a distinguished party. The first race, which was a hurdle-race for Dominion breds, two miles, was won by Jack the Barber, with Sterling second and Jack in the Green third. A hack race followed. The Flash Stakes, one mile, 100lb each, were easily won by Jim Connor, late Hilderic, with Frank Ross second and Leslie third. Then followed the race of the meeting, a two-mile dash for the Hotel-keepers' Purse, $225 to first, $75 to second; for which Lord Byron, War Cry, Rufe Hunt and War Girl started. The race was won in a canter by War Cry; Byron, who broke down, being second, the rest having been beaten off. The opening event on the second day was an open handicap hurdle race, two miles, and was won by Edonton, 145lb; Jack the Barber second. The Ladies' Purse, for Dominion breds, mile heats, was won by Montreal, a son of Thunder. Mr. Patterson's Emily, by Terror, was second. The Carlton Club Purse, $400, mile heats, open to all, was won by War Cry in two straight heats, Jim Conner second. Frank Ross broke down and Conner's leg gave way, the track being heavy. The Citizens' Purse, one mile and a half, was won by Jack Vandal, Montreal second. The last race was a one mile and a half handicap, which was won by Jack Vandal, with Emily second.

SALE OF RACEHORSES.—At the recent Saratoga Meeting, Major T. W. Doswell sold his bay horse Eolus, five years old, by Leamington out of Fanny Washington, to Mr. J. H. Harbeck, Jr., of this city, for $1,500. R. Wyndham Walden, the trainer, after winning the Alabama Stakes, worth $3,050, with his three-year-old filly Minnie W., sold her to James McKee of Paterson, N. J., for $1,500. At the same meeting Joseph Donahue purchased the chestnut horse Business, four years old, of Mr. D. J. Crouse, for $800, and he bids fair to be as remunerative an investment for his new stable as George West, bought of the same party, and Dublin have proved. The Canadian turfman, C. J. Alloway, purchased the bay horse Boss Tweed, four years old, out of Col. McDaniels & Co.'s stable, for $1,500, and he is being converted into a steeple-chaser. Mr. J. D. Bannatyne, the Canadian turfman and owner of Duffy and Milesian, purchased the chestnut two-year-old brother to Saucebox, by Star Davis out of Sheladilie, of Mr. C. J. Alloway, for $3,000 in gold. He is a magnificent-looking colt, but unfortunately has no engagements either at two or three years old. Mr. J. F. Chamberlin has recently purchased in Kentucky several yearlings; among them a full brother to Tammany, a sister to Saucebox; a half-sister to Artist, and a half-brother to Metairie. Mr. J. W. Pennock has sold his chestnut colt, three years old, by Planet out of Rebecca T. Price, to James McKee of Paterson, N. J., and he is now trained along with Minnie Mc, in Garry Bell's stable. Mr. Thomas Purysear, on behalf of Messrs. Dennison & Crawford, purchased of Mr. Grinstead his chestnut two-year-old colt by Gilroy, dam sister to Ruric, for $3,500. This colt ran second to Battleaxe in the Kentucky Stakes.

FIVE-MILE TROT.—A trotting match for £200, distance five miles, came off on the Lichfield and Burton turnpike, Eng., Aug. 4, between W. Morley's bay mare Rose and Mr. Moore's bay mare Polly Cabbage. Both animals, looking in splendid condition, were on the scratch at the time appointed, viz., 6 o'clock, and a good start was effected at the first attempt, the pair trotting together in rare form for about a quarter of a mile, when Polly Cabbage drew ahead, and her opponent broke badly, thereby leaving Polly with a great advantage. Rose, however, settled down, and speedily got within a few lengths, only, however, to again lose ground by breaking, which performance she repeated time after time, Polly Cabbage going right away, and her lead was never interfered with, although Rose settled down to her work in gallant style the last two miles, and after being upwards of half a mile behind, finished within a hundred yards of her opponent, the latter tiring very much at the finish. The betting was 5 to 4 on Polly Cabbage, and a large amount of money changed hands. Time, 18 min. 5sec. Mr. Reeves was referee.

SPORT AT CHICAGO, ILL.—The turfites of the Phœnix City were afforded some sport at Dexter Park on the afternoon of Aug. 19, when several contests of an interesting character took place. The first race was a trot for a stake of $400, best three in five; J. Wallace entered gray gelding Gray Eagle; T. Armour bay mare Nelly and F. Latcham bay gelding Frank. Gray Eagle won the race in three straight heats. The second race was a match for $200 between T. Harris' big black gelding Hero, to wagon, and G. Anderson's Gray George to sulky. There was little betting on the result. The Gray won the race. After these regular races, contests of lesser importance. Weazel was pitted against Moody for $25, and won the money in 3:11¾. After that Lightning Rod, a pacer, and a trotter named Timer, took a brush, which was won by Timer in 3:24¾.

PROSPECTIVE SPORT AT FLAT ROCK, MICH.—The sporting circles of this dull community—where that popular young knight of the sock and buskin, Owen Fawcett, has recently been enjoying his otium cum dig.—are at present excited over a trot which is to take place on the 1st prox., for a purse of $100, between Henry Harriman's bay mare Lady Harriman and Joshua Cushman's cream horse Buckskin Jim—both "native there, and to the manner born." Quite a large sum of money, for that quiet place, is at stake, and both parties are equally sanguine of success. Dr. Hiram W. Lobdell and Seward Vreeland are the backers of Harriman, who is a popular wielder of the cleaver. W. L. Walters, railroad contractor, and J. A. Pierson, merchant, back Cushman, who is the owner of the mail coaches running between Flat Rock and Rockwood.

NEW RACING STABLE.—Mr. Pierre Lorillard of this city is the latest accession to the racing turf in this section. Last year he made extensive purchases through Messrs. Weatherby of London of the best English broodmares and yearlings that could be purchased in that country. The only one trained was the imported two-year-old colt Scot, by Beadsman out of imported Gitrasol by English Asteroid, who won the Theseian Stakes at Monmouth Park August Meeting. He has purchased an extensive estate in Burlington County, N. J., where he purposes forming a complete breeding and training establishment for racehorses. He has engaged as trainer Mr. B. W. Pryor, the eldest son of Mr. Beadsman's trainer, and until his own track is completed, his horses will be trained at Monmouth Park.

NEVER LAUGH at a man who can handle pig-iron all day without fatigue, because he happens to perspire when he writes his name.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

At a meeting of the directors of the above Association, held in this city Aug. 19, a circular was read from which we learn that the first annual match of the Association will be held at Creedmoor, L. I., on Wednesday, Oct. 8, and following days, when, in addition to a number of prizes for individual marksmanship, consisting of medals, badges and money prizes, there will be offered valuable prizes to be contended for by teams from different regiments, among which are the following:

First—The "State Prize" of $500, to be awarded to that regiment of the National Guard of New York whose "team" of twelve shall make the best score, the best sh

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, Aug. 25, '73.

The weather during the week just closed was not at all favorable to public entertainments, whether indoor or out, yet the opening of Niblo's and the Grand Opera-house was attended by very large audiences, who, by the applause bestowed, gave evidence of unusual enjoyment. Detailed reports of these events may be found duly chronicled in our city summary, while the reopening of theatres and halls throughout the country is recorded in the various departments of our Theatrical Record. The recent heavy rains, of unusually long duration, have curtailed the season at Summer resorts, and driven sojourners at rural and seaside retreats to beat a hasty retreat from those places, and seek the comforts which only their own homes can ensure them. While this has injured the prospects of hotel-keepers and shebang engineers at out-of-town resorts, it cannot fail to have the effect of bringing about an early resumption of business in the cities, the hotel registers denoting a heavy addition to the number of their guests, and this at least two weeks in advance of other seasons. Taking advantage of the closing of the season at the seaside, the springs, the mountains, and the farm houses, our city folks are bustling and hurrying up things, in order to catch the ripple which indicates the approach of the tidal wave of prosperity. Our advertising columns clearly show that business is meant, that managers and people have been enjoying a brief respite from their professional duties are once more in harness for a fresh campaign, and that they anticipate a lively and profitable term. Through THE CLIPPER the wants of managers and performers are supplied without delay, while the lovers of amusement in cities, towns and villages far away are duly informed of the coming of their favorite ..... A word to those industrious gentlemen who initiate the applause at our city theatres may not be inopportune. We are not questioning the alleged usefulness of these parties; we are not intimating that their services are necessary; neither are they important. But we implore them not to be overhasty in their well-intended manifestations of approval and delight, not to come in with their "rapturous applause" until the point in the performance set down in the "conductor's book" is reached, nor to clash in their earnest efforts to encourage genius and give holy sympathy to the aspiring candidate for histrionic honors. These gentlemen are supposed to be under the guidance or leadership of one who has made a life-long study of applauding a life-long study, and who, individually, is always on time, at the proper places, and for the favored players; but the novices, in their honest desire to earn their salaries, start the clapping about a minute or so short of the time, thus depriving the audience of enjoying with the complete enjoyment of the audience, and disgusting the skilful leader of the claquers. We have much to learn in this branch of our home industry, although even professionals are apt to err at times. We would offer a kindly admonish "the man who laughs" to draw it mild where the facts do not warrant a free and unbridled expression of uncontrollable merriment. There should be a little judgment exercised in the matter of dispensing "hearty laughter." If the joke set down for a go in the professional laugher's memoranda is not clear to the most abstruse observer, a faint smile should suffice; but instead of this, "the man" indulges in a merry peel of laughter that shakes the house to the foundation, and infects the entire audience: and this, mind you, draws attention from the alleged comical actor whose merry conceit has elicited "this spontaneous outburst," and fastens it upon "the man who laughs," to the detriment, you will observe, of the poor player. Apropos of this subject, a story comes to us from the gay capital Paris. There, the claque business is somewhat better managed, but we should bear in mind that we are in our infancy in this respect. This French story is to this effect: "Attached to the Cafes Chantants are certain individuals who, for the modest sum of two or three francs a night, engage to indulge in hilarious and contagious merriment, and at particular couplets, supposed to be more than usually comic, to split their sides with laughter. But mere routine is occasionally rather dangerous, as was proved not long since by the following incident: Without the fact having been communicated to the professional laugher at a Cafe Chantant in the Champs Elysees, a particular song had been withdrawn from the programme and another substituted. The laugher had been quietly dozing, without attending to what was going on, when suudenly rousing himself, and looking at the clock inside the gate, he perceived, believing the programme unchanged, that it was time for him to indulge in one of his most excruciating fits of cachinatory exhilerment. He did so. In another instant he was nearly murdered. He had burst out in the midst of a touching couplet about Alsace and Lorraine. Though he escaped with his life, his hat was smashed in and his clothes torn off his body by the deeply-moved and patriotic audience, before he could explain that he was not a German in disguise, but an unfortunate professional laugher, who had exercised his calling in the wrong place." There is another thing to which we desire to advert, and that is the toting of children to places of amusement. And firstly, we wish it to be distinctly understood that, in what we have to say, we are not actuated by any hostile prejudices against these well-springs of pleasure. We bear no hatred to infantile offspring—they are necessary evils, we admit, and are well enough in their places, but the theatre is not one of those places. It is natural for children to inherit griping pains, and to give token of their uneasiness by unearthly yells. By the domestic fireside, or by their fond parents' side "when half the world is in a lonely, solemn darkness hung," this is all well enough, and no one is disturbed but the originators and authors of these midnight brawlers; but to introduce these "merry little pratlers" into a public place of amusement is a wrong that should no longer be tolerated nor submitted to by an outraged people. It would seem that these crying evils are actuated solely by a devilish spirit of malicious mischief, in so far as they are quiet enough until some deeply interesting point in the performance has been reached, and then—while the audience are spell-bound, scarcely breathing in order that not a word of the dialogue may be lost—these offshoots of humanity break out with the most fiendish screeches, which they keep up until all interest in the play has been destroyed, while their fond mother looks as unconcerned as if the child wasn't her own. Now, what we desire to suggest is, that if devoted mothers will bring their progeny to the theatre, let the latter be well dosed with laudanum or carbonic acid, or some other powerful disinfectant, just before the rising of the curtain, and as in duty bound we will ever pray, and so forth..... Little things oftentimes lead to great results, as you may oft observe. It is said that Chanfrau the actor was first inspired with the imitative talent which has since so well served him in his profession by the incident, when a boy, and taking his cheap dinner in a Bowery restaurant, of a fireman entering hastily, and ordering a sixpenny plate of pork and beans, requesting the waiter, at the same time, not to stop to count the beans. On the model of this fire laddie, we believe, Chanfrau built up his Mose of after-days. "Our Jim," whose appetite is something marvelous, when told about this little thing, said that he believed it all but the sixpenny dinner, and that he couldn't swallow..... Ere long the flowers will have faded, the foliage of the trees be withered and dead, and all the beauties of the hillside and valley be covered with the mantle of Winter. Ere that ensues we propose to introduce you to our garden, wherein may be found some of the treasures we delight in, while we indulge in a slight "play" upon the names of certain theatrical and minstrel managers and performers:

TE THESPIAN GARDEN.

We've Castles, Villas, Halls and Rooms,
Kings, Queens and Earls, about our "boards;"
Romantic Hills and shady Streets,
With smiling Fields and pleasant Fords.
Within the Thespian garden green
Grow Thornes and Bryers not a few;
For those religiously inclined
Are Bishops, Popes and Pastors, too!

An Abbott holds his Court of State—
A Sexton makes the people "scream"—
Our Taylors, Cooks and Bakers all
Are held in very high esteem;
Our Birch is quite a pop'lar tree,
Our Rivers D. Davies can roll to pole
And in the sharpest Winter days
We're well supplied with Wood and Cole!

We've frisky Lambs and Shepherds, too;
Our Gods well manuffire lands;
Somers and Winters claim our care—
Our Booths have changed to buildings grand.
Artistic eyes must glance with pride
On heights and brilliant Hughes and Wrays!
And who among us can forget
Our merry Knights and happy Days?

The garden hath an hundred charms
To tempt the weary passer-by.
The Moss luxuriantly grows,
The Wells are deep, the Walls are high.
If the actor wander far
To grasp the Beautiful in Truth,
And drink revivifying draughts
From fountains of perpetual Youth.

..... The tribulations of managers are many, and their sufferings can scarcely be endured—their shelves groan with the weight of unread plays that rest upon them, and their desks are banked up on all sides by letters of aspiring young people whose tendencies are toward the mimic boards. When a man assumes managerial reins he must bridle his passions and curb his tongue, otherwise his life will be one of misery and woe. From the very start he is surrounded with gentle creatures who desire to get in the front row, whether they be apt for the purpose or not. Juveniles hedge him in like he was a side-show, and fond mothers talk him almost to death about the genius of their gifted children. No wonder so many of them fly to the flowing bowl—no wonder our insane asylums and old men's homes number so many among their inhabitants. Why, the letters they receive are enough to drive them to suicide or to Europe. See here now what we are going to show you. The epistle given below is a copy, verb-atim, and every other atim, of a letter received a couple of weeks ago by a popular manager who annually makes a tour of the country. It appears that the young man had previously had a personal interview with the manager, and to keep the matter fresh went for him with the pen. Out of respect, etc., we omit all names:

AUG. 4, 1873.

—SIR.—Hoping you answer this letter as quick as you possibly can also with an engagement it possible in one of the following buisnesses. As I told you in the early day of the above date in the interview we had in the town Hall that I can make myself useful in all branches of the profession First, I have done character changes General Tregdiene, Low comedian Assistant Agent, Dresser, Bill distributor, excellant satisfaction on props—Including myself capable of taking any part in Drama, comedy or Tragedy, I am able to play them all in a young man of 20 short experience can take and give I am pretty sure good satisfaction The last party I was engaged with was ..... Minstrel Troupe So my next if possible give an engagement in one of the above ..... I am unsteady and dispised to leave here soon stateing in what capacity where to meet or when to write salary leave altogether to yourself Direct to Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

no so-scription, I pay for CAN.

We have known many men of genius in the profession, but very few who possessed the versatility of the writer of the above lines. And yet his happiness is not apparent, nor are his wants requited..... A correspondent sends us a letter, desiring to know where the player folks go when they're off duty. "O where do all our favorites go?" sighs this admirer of the stage, who knows that Chanfrau has a place where he may hear the ocean rage; and Adams, Thompson, Mitchell, and others, no doubt, have grounds to rid themselves of bothers. The subject strange ideas gives flow to: There's Smith who snores on simple straws, and Jones who snoozes where'er he chooses; and Miss La Fleur, the fairy star, who weeps and mourns in meadows green, and revels with Jenks the enchanting goes gallivanting with Stilts the "spurger," bolts beer and Limburger; while hundreds of others, sisters and brothers, out of a sit, go sadly roaming without a stiver to warm the liver. And that's where a host of the "envied" go to..... The only conundrum W. Shakspeare ever made was a failure, and came near jeopardizing his literary career. It was simple enough, and yet it did not create a sensation. It was as follows: "What's in a name?" Perhaps there was nothing in it to the author of the day, but according to the progress of time, his day is not our day. Once upon a time there arrived in the home of the brave a music man from a town on the river Elbe. His title was high sounding enough, but it continually got him into trouble and difficulties, that, and he seriously began to question whether this was a land of liberty or not. One day he applied to a city manager for an engagement. The manager asked his name, and received for answer, "Hugo De Elbe," whereupon he kicked the profane musician right out into the street. And so the tyro went on, and the managers not even deigning to notice him. By the time he had finished his first batch of calls, he had got along so queerly with his broken English that he found himself mixed up in a dozen fights, got his head severely put in pouncing, a new hat on his head, and his timbers shivered generally. Then he was taken before a Police Justice—may be it was our neighbor, Judge Dowling. "What is your name?" blandly inquired the judge. "Hugo De Elbe," answered the culprit. "What!" said the surprised Dowling. "Hugo De Elbe," persisted the enraged musician. "Give him six months," said the Judge, reddening violently; "I'll learn him how to behave himself in future in a court of justice." The way that man from Elbe went down those stairs with six policemen on top of him was a distressing sight. The Judge thought he said: "You go d'hell."

CITY SUMMARY.

THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE, recently known as the Athenæum, was opened for the season on Monday evening, Aug. 18, before an audience which filled the auditorium in every part, while many persons were turned from the doors unable to obtain even eligible standing-room. The performances opened with the farce of "Grimshaw, Bagshaw and Bradshaw," in which George Ketchum impersonated Mr. Grimshaw in an extremely eccentric manner, displaying much comic ability, and eliciting repeated peals of laughter from the audience. Miss Belle Howitt gave a vivacious and satisfactory impersonation of Fanny Sparks. Joe Lang as Bagshaw, Add Ryman as Towser, and Helene Smith as Emily, filled their roles acceptably. George H. Coes sang a ballad with piano accompaniment, which met with favor. Luke Schoolcraft was warmly welcomed on his reappearance, being a local favorite, and won much approbation by the performance of his Dutch specialties. Shed. and Dan Le Clair exhibited their skill in hat-spinning, and the former, later in the evening, performed feats upon the "invisible" wire, all of which merit commendation. Add Ryman, in a stump oration, kept the audience well amused, while many of his witticisms were original and witty. Helene Smith was seen to advantage in songs-and-dances, the excellence of her performances being well known. An act which achieved great popularity during the past season, and entitled "Oh! Well, It's No Use," illustrated by Lingard, Schoolcraft, George H. Coes and Lang, was uproariously received. Nully Pieris sang several ballads in a pleasing manner, and was deservedly recalled. George and Charles Reynolds performed a double song-and-dance entitled "My Gal," and, being encored, favored the audience with a repetition of their special acts, which would prove more effective if they were somewhat abridged. Signor Zegrino, assisted by M. Bislay, performed, in addition to some excellent feats upon the aerial trapeze, a startling leap from the gallery, through a hoop to which was attached sharp-bladed knives and little pans containing red fire, to a trapeze suspended some feet distant, and by that trapeze he swung to the proscenium, where he caught a small trapeze held by M. Bislay, who was suspended by his feet being caught in rings attached to the ceiling. It was one of the most daring and startling feats we have ever witnessed, and was performed with much grace, apparent ease and coolness. "Jack Cade the Bondaman" introduced, as the representative of the chief character, Nelse Seymour, who, when he stepped upon the stage, was greeted with loud and long-continued applause. His performance gave the best of satisfaction. The entertainments concluded with a new and original burlesque by Add. Ryman, entitled "Funny Mokes in a Fog." It proved far more meritorious than the average of like compositions, and was sensibly performed and achieved a marked success. Sam Rickey and Master Barney are to make their first appearance since their return from California on Aug. 25, and John Morris, "mystic change" artist, will also commence an engagement.

M. HARTZ, the magician, intends to return to the stage as soon as he can obtain a suitable hall or theatre in this city in which to exhibit a new illusion, which he has invented; but his appearance in public will not interfere with his magical manufactory, which will be conducted as usual. See advertisement.

E. F. ENERLE arrived during the past week. He is engaged at the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia, as assistant stage-manager for the coming season.

FRANK MORAN, the well-known minstrel manager of Philadelphia, is in town.

"THE BLACK CROOK" was revived at Niblo's Garden for the fourth time on Monday evening, Aug. 18. It may not be inappropriate at the present time to briefly review the record of this spectacle, which has probably achieved the greatest monetary success ever known to the American stage. It was originally produced at the old Niblo's Garden on Wednesday evening, Sept. 12, 1866, and was acted consecutively until Jan. 4, 1868, inclusive—474 performances. It was revived Dec. 12, 1870, and withdrawn after April 8, 1871, having been performed 102 nights and 20 matinees. A portion of the spectacle was performed a few additional times for benefits. The third revival occurred Dec. 18, 1871, and it was withdrawn after the performances of Feb. 24, 1872, having been performed 67 times. Thus it will be seen that it had been performed 653 times prior to its present revival. The chief characters have been impersonated by the following artists: Hertzog, C. H. Morton; Rudolph, G. C. Boniface, Theodore Hamilton and Arthur Matthison; Wolfenstein, J. W. Blaisdell, A. Fitzgerald and E. L. Collier; Von Puffengruntz, J. G. Burnett, H. Pearson and Ben. Maginley; Greppo, George Atkins and Felix Rogers; Dragonfin, Horace Peters; Carline, Miss Braddon and Master Martin; Zamiel, E. B. Holmes, Mr. Packard and J. Robertson: Stalacta, Annie Kemp, Pauline Markham and Kate Santley; Amina, Rose Morton, Mrs. G. C. Boniface, Grace Rawlinson, and Bessie Sudlow; Dame Dingwara, Mary Wells and Mrs. E. V. Wright; Carline, Millie Cavendish, Lizzie Wilmore, Fanny Prestige, Lizzie Kelsey and Jennie Lee. The principal dancers who have appeared in the spectacle have been Mlle. Marie Bonfanti, Rita Sangalli, the Rigl Sisters—Betty and Emily—Cora Adrienne, Rosa Pagani, Louisa and Giovani Mazzoni and Adelaide and Eugenia Zuccoli, Mlles. de Rosa, Sohlke, Lupo, Sassi, and the Remmelsburg Sisters, Betty and Sophie. Since the first production of the piece the following performers who took part therein have died: James G. Burnett, the first representative of Puffengruntz, at Chicago, Ill., March 19, 1870; Millie Cavendish, the first Carline, New York City, Jan. 23, 1867; Signor David Costa, the ballet master, at Havana, a few months since; Mlle. Zuccoli, at Havana, Oct. 30, 1868. James E. Hayes, who painted a portion of the scenery for the original production, New York City, May 7, 1873. Charles M. Barras, the author of the spectacle, was accidentally killed at Cos Cob, Ct., March 31, 1873. On the occasion of the present revival it was presented with the following cast:

|---|---|
| Count Wolfenstein | Caspar ..... J. Riley |
| Harry Gwinnette | Red Glare ..... W. Carpenter |
| Rudolph ..... E. K. Collier | Skuldawelp ..... Julian Mitchell |

The scenery, which has been freshly painted by W. Voegtlin, is neither so elaborate nor magnificent as that seen upon previous occasions, yet it reflects the skill of the artist. The transformation scene, which terminates the first act, differs from any hitherto presented. At the back is seen a cascade of real water dashing down a cliff in close simulation of nature; in the centre an enormous skeleton in the act of climbing a tree; on the right huge birds and monsters, and on various portions of the stage large demoniacal heads appear. During the progress of the scene a performer attired as an imp makes a rapid aerial flight across the stage. The next important scene is the grotto of Stalacta, close of the second act, which cannot convey to the reader those hitherto presented. As the scene was disclosed, a number of ladies made up as mermaids were seen sporting in the cool waters of the lake, but their motions were not particularly graceful, nor was the effect striking. At the back a prismatic fountain was seen, but only a few colored lights were thrown upon it. A quartet was announced to be sung by Stalacta, Carline, Rudolphe and Greppo, but we could only distinguish two voices—those of the ladies. Greppo, however, kept the audience in the best of humor by his facial contortions, and rendered the music to be twice redemanded. In a ballet called "The Revel of the Sirens," Mlles. Adele Boni, from La Scala, Milan, and Emilia Giavassi, from the Grand Theatre, Florence, made their American debut. They were supported by Mlles. Lecerline, Caroline, Maria, Bertha, Grivelly, Lizette, Dark, Elise, Emily, Jeannette, Strudel, Theresa, Hunt, Joanna, Baretta, Badoni and Bochanna. Mlle. Boni is a brunette, of a slight figure and a face that cannot be called prepossessing, while Mlle. Giavassi is a blonde with a pretty face and a somewhat plumper form. They are merely fair dancers, who have undoubtedly studied their art in a good school, but have not as yet attained to the proficiency and finish of premiers. The ballet was pleasing, groupings effective, and costumes elegant. The lighting of the scene in the rear of the ballet, prior to us "an Illuminated Golden Terrace," which was arranged upon the same plan as a similar scene given upon the revival of the spectacle in December, 1870, save that it was divested almost entirely of the rich ornamentation with which the latter was profusely studded. The performances consisted of "A Grand Ballet of all Nations," opening with "The Dance of Brittany" by the corps de ballet, followed by Persian and Russian dances by the coryphees; a Spanish dance by the second dancers; a sensational Hungarian dance by Mlle. Zuccolo "by the Gipsy Haniola, Emilie, Kati, Mons. Bolossy and Imre Kiraify; a dance of Normandy by Mlle. Giavassi; a South American dance by Master Martin, Arnold Kiraify and other ladies and gentlemen; a United States dance by Mlle. Boni, Magyar and frisks by the Kiraify Family, and Chinese and Japanese dances by a corps of children. The costumes were magnificent, and the coup d'œil presented as the large number of persons clad in the attire customary among the various nations represented commingled with each other, was most effective. The Kiraify Family won much applause by their spirited performance, which is particularly to be commended for the artistic skill shown in the invention and arrangement of both the ballets introduced in the spectacle. The South American ballet, entitled "Fandango," in the act of the "United States," the music of the latter being a fresh arrangement of our national air of "Yankee Doodle." After the ballet, the London Madrigal Boys, fifteen in number, sang "Spring, Spring, Gentle Spring," very effectively, and were twice recalled; the twin sisters Verday, two handsome, bright-looking children of some seven or eight Summers, gave upon the aerial trapeze the various feats usually performed by skilled artists of mature years, and with which they evinced no touch of nerve themselves challenge direct comparison. Their performances were frequently interrupted with lavish applause, and after their conclusion they were several times recalled, at which times they performed a number of difficult acrobatic feats upon the stage floor. M. Felix Gregory, the well-known caricaturist, who made his American debut, sketched rapidly with a charcoal crayon, upon a large sheet of brown paper attached to a screen, creditable caricature likenesses of Mayor Havemeyer, President Grant, Judge Dowling, Ballard Smith and others, presenting but two sketches each evening. He was loudly applauded, and recalled some half a dozen times. E. D. Davies, the well-known ventriloquist, met with a most cordial reception as he came before the audience. He has a nature of his skill, and the dialogues with Tom, Joey, Mary Jones and others, were as witty and entertaining as ever, while the art by which he accomplished his wonderful effects was entirely concealed. He also introduced, for the first time in America, two new puppets. Two rough boxes, having the appearance of packing cases, were placed on either side of the stage, and when Mr. Davies moved a certain portion of their tops they changed quickly after the manner of a trick in a pantomime, and the audience saw before them an elderly gentleman and lady, comfortably seated in arm-chairs. Mr. Davies, by the aid of his ventriloquial skill, and certain concealed machinery to manipulate the lips of the figures, caused them, apparently, to talk and sing. These performances were much enjoyed, as the approbation of the spectators attested. The march of the Amazons closed the act. This is the only feature of the spectacle which we can conscientiously say by far surpassed previous productions. The helmets, breastplates and shields were in imitation of polished gold, and the helmets and shields differed in pattern. The costumes of ladies light cavalry were varied in hue, and the effect of the whole was most pleasing. The marching was creditable, and Miss Pauline Markham, as the leader, presented a superb appearance. At the end of the fourth act, instead of the customary transformation scene, an allegorical scene, entitled "Columbia Morgan," were exhibited. The figures were of colossal size, similar to those by the same artist in "Leo and Lotos," and evinced great artistic skill. The first is entitled "Wine," and shows a Venetian student being derided by his fellow students for having the pleasures of the banquet. The room is filled with persons of both sexes, in various stages of intoxication, while upon a table stands an actress of the period, clad in drapery so thin that her form is plainly discernible, singing a Bacchanalian song. Underneath, "Wealth," shows the Student and his Tempter gazing upon the gambling-tables between the columns of St. Marc at Venice, while on his right, somewhat obscured by the shadow of a column, is seen the Student's intended wife, the latter's head bowed in delight at his triumph over the Tempter; the third, "Woman," represents the ideal woman, the dream of all mankind, with the World at the feet of Beauty. A female figure, entirely nude, with her hands twining her golden tresses, is represented as ascending in the air, while upon the ground beneath her feet lie crowns, kings tendering their crowns, a cardinal, a warrior, a miser offering his money-b edy and dialect; W. R. Gray, second heavy; Annie Campion, leading; Marian Clifton, old women; Emma Pierce, soubrette; Laura Don, juvenile; Abbie Wade, singing and walking lady; Helen Florence and Nellie Wright, walking ladies; and a number of utility and ballet people. Among the above are ten new people and seven of last season's company..... Mr. Robt. McWade, who has been spending the Summer at his home, in this city, starts on his Fall and Winter season Sept. 22, playing at Syracuse and Troy, with the Buffalo Academy company; thence (alone) to Academy of Music, Chicago; Olympic Theatre, New York, four weeks; Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington, Richmond, St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans, Galveston, and back through the Eastern circuit."

JOHN T. RAYMOND, while in England, purchased of W. S. Gilbert the right to perform "The Wicked World" in some of the principal cities in America.

HOWARD, LANGRISHE & CARLE'S "MAGIC TALISMAN" COMBINATION performed at Fort Wayne, Ind., Aug. 18, 19, Logansport 20, 21, Lafayette 22, 23, and are to show at Indianapolis 25, 26, 27, Louisville, Ky., 28, 29, 30. Mr. Charles Carle, who recently sailed for Vienna, we are informed, was called there by the death of an uncle, a priest, who named him in his will the sole executor to a large estate, which he held in his own right and not subject to the control of the church. Mr. Carle is also a principal legatee, and, it is said, will inherit 50,000 florins, the balance of the property going to his mother and his brother Leopold. One of the conditions of the will is, that before a year expires the principal legatee shall build a chapel in the legator's native village, furnish it elegantly, and select a boy from the same village and educate him for the church. Mr. Carle holds his interest in the above company until May next.

MONS. CARLE MARRIOT, Marie Marrig, Antoinette Kurtz, Amy Crome, Hattie and Pauline Smith and the St. Felix Infant Ballet Troupe are to be added to the ballet attractions of Howard, Langrishe & Carle's "Magic Talisman" Combination.

THE OPERA-HOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., was opened for the season on Aug. 18, Mlle. Moriacchi, a ballet troupe and the Girards being the star attractions. "Esmeralda" was performed during the week. "The French Spy" is announced for Aug. 25.

FOX & DERBY'S PANTOMIME TROUPE is to perform at Albany, N. Y., Aug. 29, 30.

JENNIE CARROLL and a dramatic company are to perform "The New Magdalen" at Bridgeport, Ct., Aug. 28.

WALL'S OPERA-HOUSE, Washington, D. C., will be opened Sept. 1 with one of Manager Ford's companies in "Under the Gaslight."

BENJAMIN YOUNG, an actor, died suddenly of heart disease in his native city, Philadelphia, Pa., on Aug. 24. He made his first appearance on the stage in the city of his birth at the Coates-street Theatre. In June, 1838, he first appeared at the Walnut-street Theatre, and in June, 1850, he made his debut in New York City, at the National Theatre, where he performed a successful star engagement. He excelled particularly in the delineation of negro characters, in which he had no rivals, and few, if any, equals. He was about 60 years of age.

MANAGERS desiring to secure the European specialties now under engagement to the Kiralfy Brothers are referred to an advertisement in another column.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES WALCOT recently declined an offer to join the company at the Haymarket Theatre, London, Eng.

MR. CHICHESTER, second old men, and Mrs. Chichester, singing chambermaids, advertise for engagements.

MANAGERS desiring to secure a sensational company for vacant dates are referred to Fred. G. Maeder's card in another column.

MLLE. IDA IDALIE, premiere danseuse assoluta, desires engagements. See advertisement for address.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES WALCOT, who return from Europe about Sept. 1, are prepared to accept brief star engagements. Their repertory will include W. S. Gilbert's last new comedy of "The Wicked World" and Henry J. Byron's domestic drama "Haunted Houses." Address Col. T. Allston Brown, No. 9 West Fourth street.

A LEADING LADY, twenty-five ballet ladies, an entire dramatic company, all to travel, are wanted by Davis & Co., dramatic agents of Cincinnati, O.; also ladies that can sing and dance for the variety business, and several young ladies and gentlemen desirous of joining the profession.

NAT HYAMS' DRAMATIC COMPANY performad at Owensville, Ky., Aug. 22, 23, and is billed at Mt. Sterling 25, 26, 27, 28. Winchester 29, 30, Sept. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

THE SELDEN IRWIN COMBINATION is billed to perform at Pekin, Ill., Aug. 25, 26, 27; Ottumwa, Ia., 28, 29, 30; Des Moines, Sept. 1 to 6 inclusive (Fair week), Richmond, Ind., 8 to 13, inclusive (Fair week).

THE HELEN D'ESTE DRAMATIC COMPANY is to commence the season at Reading, Pa., Sept. 1, remaining three nights, thence to Bethlehem 4, Easton 5, 6, Harrisburg 8, Tyrone 9, Altoona 10.

GERARD T. HOWARD, Edward Langrishe & Carle's Combination, can be communicated with as per card in another column.

AMUSEMENTS IN BOSTON, MASS., are reported as follows by our correspondent, who wrote on Aug. 24:

The attendance at the Museum during the past week, the second of "The Enchanted Beauty," has been immense, standing room only being the nightly announcement. It seems to have taken a new lease of life, for the houses have at no other time during this run been so large as at present. Willie Edouin has withdrawn, being under engagement to open with Lydia Thompson in New York, and his place has been most satisfactorily filled by Mr. Edouin's brother, Mr. Rose Edouin, who is somewhat different from Mr. Edouin's, but it is very funny, and meets with general approval. Harry Bryant the ventriloquist was added to the list of attractions this week, and has met with success. The coming week is the eighth and last of the burlesque and of the Summer season, and on Monday, Sept. 1, the thirty-first regular dramatic season opens with a standard comedy. The company engaged is as follows: Wm. Warren, Chas. Barron, W. J. Le Moyne (from the Fifth-avenue, N. Y.), R. F. McClannin, W. H. Crisp (from Wallack's), Arthur Moreland, J. H. Ring, J. S. Alexander (from the London theatres), J. W. Shannon (from the Brooklyn theatres), C. Pierson (from the Walnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia), J. Nolan, S. Bellew (from the Boston theatres), Fred. Warde, W. Standish, A. S. H. Murray, J. A. Paige, J. H. Griffin, Fred Williams, Annie Clarke, Mrs. J. R. Vincent, Mary Cary (from the Fifth-avenue), Mrs. Fred Williams, Susie Cary (from the Pittsburgh theatres), Laura Phillips, Amy Ames, Belle Bailey, Fannie Skerrett, Margaret Parker, Nellie Downing, Lillie Joyce, Josie Bowne, Ada Henley, Nellie Stevens, and Miss Nellie Leighton. The officers of the house are: Manager, Mr. R. M. Field; stage-manager, Mr. Fred Williams; treasurer, Mr. George W. Blatchford; prompter, Mr. J. R. Simonds; leader of orchestra, Mr. Arthur Morgan; Mr. E. N. Catlin; scenic artists, Messrs. Edward Cotter and Horace George; master machinist, Mr. Warren Marden; properties, M. J. Sullivan; gas and calcium effects, Mr. J. Wetherell; advertising agent, Mr. W. Whelan. The Boston Theatre is at present closed for repairs, but on Sept. 1 it throws open its doors for the regular season, presenting as its first attraction the drama "Polaris, or Northern Lights," written specially for this theatre. The stock company engaged is as follows: L. R. Shewell, J. H. Fitzpatrick, H. S. Murdoch, C. Leslie Allen, D. J. Hardiman, Harry Hilliard, G. W. Wilson, Harry Holmes, W. H. Norton, T. M. Hunter, J. W. Hayne, J. O. Stevens, Rufus Scott, J. W. Gardiner, R. L. Dillon, J. Taylor, Albert Collins, C. Rayner, C. Madden, N. Alden, Mr. Thomas, Mrs. Thomas, Barry, Olivia Rand, Mrs. Charles Poole, Mrs. T. M. Hunter, Blanche Hayden, Mrs. C. Leslie Allen, Ruth Hoffman, Hattie Stevens, M. A. Hart, Carrie Prescott, M. Follett, Annie Winslow, Jessie Morgan, E. Smiley and J. Smiley. Proprietors, Thayer & Tompkins; manager, L. R. Shewell; treasurer, John M. Ward; business agent, H. A. M'Gregor; leader of orchestra, Signor Lothian; scenic artist, Charles S. Getz; master machinist, W. P. Prescott; properties, J. B. Sullivan; gas engineer, George Wilkinson; wardrobe, Charlotte Gilbert. The theatre will be run as during the recently ended season with an occasional piece by the stock company alone. Among the stars engaged are F. S. Chanfrau, Edwin Booth, Maggie Mitchell, Neil Burgess and Charles Fechter. Booth is to have season of the Nilsson opera, the Lucca opera, the Aimee opera bouffe and the Kellogg English opera..... George A. Ernst has just returned from New York, where he has been negotiating with the Union-square Theatre for the production of his comedy "A Christmas Supper," which made such a success last March at the Boston Museum. It is not unlikely that it will re-open the coming season with Mr. Stuart Robson in the role played here by Mr. Warren. Mr. Ernst has also sold the sole right of playing his new comedy drama "The Modern Puck" to Miss Blanche Holt, who intends starring with it the coming season..... R. F. McClannin has returned from his Summer vacation..... Hart Conway leaves this week for Cincinnati, where he opens with Kelly's Fifth-avenue Company Sept. 1..... H. S. Murdoch returned Friday from a brief visit to Philadelphia.

EARL BRUCE, male soprano and baritone vocalist, whose address find elsewhere, wants an engagement.

VARIETY HALLS.

R. M. CARROLL AND SONS are to play at Pittsburgh, Pa., four weeks, commencing Sept. 8, with the Kernan Brothers, Washington, D. C., two weeks, beginning Oct. 6, and with the same firm at Baltimore, Md., for a like period opening on the 20th.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., variety news is reported as follows by our correspondent, under dates of Aug. 22: "The season of 1873-4 commenced at Fred. Aims' American Theatre on the 16th, and the throng that applied for admission was so great that many could not be accommodated with even standing-room. The interior of the house looks bright and cheerful, the auditorium having been repainted and repapered, boxes redecorated, some new scenery introduced, new stage, carpets put down in the aisles, matting on the stairs, main entrance repainted and ornamented, and other necessary improvements made. 'One Year Married' was meritoriously given by Ben Hays, E. D. Gooding, and Miss Frank Christy. James Douglas sang acceptably. He seemed quite hoarse, which interfered somewhat with his success. A dance by the Warren Sisters was creditably executed. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Macarthy in their sketches of 'Every-day Life' and 'Barney's Courtship,' were most enjoyable. As a representative of the manners and dialects of different nationalities, Mr. Macarthy gave entire satisfaction. Miss Frank Christy's terpsichorean efforts were deserving of mention, and Miss Minnie Gray's songs-and-dances were repeatedly encored. Ben Hays' stump speech was applauded, and the Dutch performances of George S. Knight were novel and elicited much hilarity. He is an excellent comedian. The vocalization of Miss Clara Butler was well received by the more intelligent portion of the audience, and the lady was twice recalled. Gilfoil and Bourke's songs-and-dances made a good impression, and the gentlemen were obliged to respond to encores. Frank Jones, in his specialty of 'The Musical Moke,' met with a flattering reception. The act was a good one, and very well performed. The gymnastic feats of the Gnirados Brothers, George and Richard, were of more than average merit, and the aerial flight excited hearty plaudits from the auditory. The entertainment concluded with the farce of 'The Belle of the Kitchen,' with James Douglas, E. D. Gooding, Miss Dolly Warren and Miss Frank Christy in the cast. On the 21st, J. Frank Frayne's border romance entitled 'Oroloso' was presented, with Mr. Frayne and Miss Clara Butler in the leading roles. During the performance of the piece Miss Clara Butler shoots an apple from the hand of a person in sight of the audience, and Mr. Frayne shoots a small apple from the head of Miss Butler. Mlle. Fontainebleau appears on the 25th. Fred Aims is still the lessee and manager; Frank Nelson is the stage-manager; Prof. John Ritter, musical director; Charles J. Hawthorne, scenic artist; Sol Davis, treasurer, and William Dougherty, master of properties..... Morrissey and Emmerson, Miss Kate Montrose, McVeigh and Gulick, Dick Parker, Smith and Waldron, and Watty Morgan are the fresh features at the Varieties Theatre on Aug. 18. Kate Montrose has a strong voice, dresses tastefully, and her songs are nightly redemanded. Dick Parker plays a banjo fairly, and his songs, composed chiefly of local events, are in a degree popular. Smith and Waldron in their specialty of 'My Gal' were moderately successful. Morrissey and Emmerson appeared in songs-and-dances, McVeigh and Gulick in a character sketch, and Watty Morgan in a jig. Charley Howard's '10,000 Cats' and Harry Kernell's songs-and-dances met with favor, as they deserved. The performance concluded with Charley Howard's picture of plantation life, called 'Uncle Eph's Dream of Heaven,' which is well received. The Leopar Brothers, in their contortion and gymnastic acts, were above the average. Miss Lettie Scott's songs are well sung; she is attractive in appearance, and possesses a clear rich voice. Miss Kitty Henderson and Geo. F. Moore, in their double acts and songs, form an unimportant part of the programme. Mons. Caron is clever in his violin imitations. Mons. and Mme. Genot, in their double acts and songs, acquit themselves very creditably."

AT THE ALHAMBRA VARIETIES, Dallas, Texas, the fresh performances since our last were J. F. Hervey, black-wire performer; Will Leonard, comic vocalist; and Master Albert and Little Clara, "infant wonders." Charles Christy has succeeded Tommy Queen as stage-manager. Flora Bell is to close on Sept. 10, and commence at the Academy of Music, Galveston, on the 20th. Ted O'Lacey had left for Denison.

THE ODEON VARIETIES THEATRE, Newark, N. J., was opened for the Fall and Winter season on Aug. 18. Performers are advertised for.

THE HOWARD NOVELTY THEATRE, Boston, Mass., as the old Howard Athenæum is in future to be called, opened its doors on Aug. 18 for the regular Fall and Winter season, Tony Pastor's traveling troupe being the attraction. Our correspondent, writing on Aug. 24, states:

The theatre has been somewhat altered during the brief recess, being brightened by the liberal application of soap and water, if not of paint. The floor of the body of the house has been neatly carpeted, fresh matting laid in the lobbies, and several changes in the seating capacity made. The entire parquet, to be called in future the orchestra, has been supplied with new and commodious chairs, which are to cost $1, in place of 75 cents as formerly. The chairs formerly in the parquet have been removed to the balcony and dress circle in place of the benches which were there formerly. The old gallery, now called the family circle, has been entirely overhauled, and the price raised to 25 cents. The prices are thus raised slightly all round, but the improvements are well worth it, and they have not interfered in the least with the attendance, for the opening night was the largest house ever inside of the theatre, the receipts amounting, we are informed, to $1,200, which is not all counted away, unable to gain even admission. And each entertainment since has witnessed the same scene—the house packed, and crowded, and every train of cars..... The officers of the house for the coming season are as follows: Proprietors, Rich & Stetson; manager, John Stetson; treasurer, B. F. Tryon; musical director, John Braham; scenic artist, Orrin Richardson; master machinist, P. Sonera; gas engineer, W. Dixon. The performance of the Paniot Troupe this week opened with an exceedingly funny sketch called "Scenes in the Lake Shore Railroad," in which J. W. McAndrews officiated as Brakeman, and Bill Carter as Engineer. Then came Jennie Engle in serio-comic songs, which were quite fair. The Freeman Sisters and Frank Girard then gave a sketch called "Please Let My Brother Go," intended to be pathetic, but which was not a bit so. Their next act, however, was much better, richly deserving an encore. Tony Pastor himself then appeared, and, by the way in which he was encored, it seemed as though the rest of the troupe would never get a chance to appear. Then came Jennie Benson in clog, and Ella Wesner in her character songs, which were very good. The Fieldings came next, and made a hit. Billy Carter with his banjo and incidental remarks, which are certainly the funniest we have heard in a long time. Delehanty and Hengler then gave their "Little Dewdrops," which is quite good, but scarcely equal to the other good things they have given us in times past. Gus Williams followed in his excellent Dutch songs, and J. W. McAndrews gave his familiar "Charleston Gals." Tony Pastor has been appeared in her songs-and-dances, really wonderful for a child of her age, and the whole entertainment closed with the sketch of "The Happy Family," in which Gus Williams, Frank Girard, Lizzie Freeman and Maggie Fielding appeared to advantage. The troupe remains one week longer, and Nelse Seymour joins them to-morrow evening. On Sept. 1 a new force appears, among them Delehanty and Hengler, Geo. H. Coes, Herr Karl Lind, the Wilson Brothers, Harry Bloodgood, A. J. Leavitt, Alex. Davis, Walters and Morton, E. M. Hall, Cogill and Cooper.

WASHBURN'S LAST SENSATION will give entertainments at Ashland, Mass., Aug. 27, Hopkinton 28, Natick 29, Milford (twenty-first Fair) 30, Blackstone Sept. 1, Woonsocket, R. I., 2. The troupe is said to be doing a large business, and the appended notices from the Worcester daily papers of recent date speak in high terms of this first-class organization:

THE LAST SENSATION.—The Last Sensation had a fair audience at Mechanics' Hall last evening, about two thousand persons being present. The entertainment was a thoroughly good one, and the house was enthusiastic in its applause. The gray headed audience that have ever been here, and their feats showed remarkable nerve and daring. The programme was largely composed of gymnastic performances, including some hair-lifting from the ceiling of the hall and the trapeze. The banjo-playing was really artistic, and the dancing, particularly that by Ella Love, extremely good. The company, as a variety troupe, is among the best traveling.—Worcester (Mass.) Daily Press, Aug. 22.

Washburn's Last Sensation, which includes gymnasts and variety performers, appeared at Mechanics' Hall last evening before a large audience, the receipts at the door being over $600. The several features on the programme were received with loud applause, and many of the performers were recalled twice before the audience allowed them to retire.—Worcester Daily Spy, Aug. 22.

W. J. Chapelle, the agent, has recovered from his recent illness, and is again one of the show.

CINCINNATI VARIETY ITEMS to Aug. 22 are furnished as follows by our correspondent: "At the Alhambra the new appearances since we last wrote have been Georgia Gardner, Sadie Saunton, Nellie Edwards, Emma Gardner, Sadie Brandt, Amelia Gorenflo, Carrie Morton and Ella Sheldon. Artists of ability are always wanted, as per advertisement.

SHARPLEY, SHERIDAN & MACK'S Combination is to appear at Albany, N. Y., on Sept. 1.

HARRY AND WILLIAM MENDEL, Dutch and song-and-dance artists, are at present performing at the Academy of Music, Nashville, Tenn., where they can be addressed.

AT THE DOMINION THEATRE, Montreal, Canada, business continues good. Baby Bindley and Professor Bindley, fresh appearances, have made a hit. Although but four years of age, the "Baby" gives her character songs with wonderful effect, and is received with much enthusiasm, wrote our correspondent on Aug. 21, further remarking: "Prof. Bindley played several pleasing airs on the tumbleronicon and concertina. Mlle. Kimball's serio-comic songs are well received. The Leopar Brothers, in their contortion and gymnastic acts, were above the average. Miss Lettie Scott's songs are well sung; she is attractive in appearance, and possesses a clear rich voice. Miss Kitty Henderson and Geo. F. W. J. Chapelle, the agent, has recovered from his recent illness, and is again one of the show.

BUSINESS at the Vandeville Theatre, Louisville, Ky., continues fine. The new appearances on Aug. 18 were Frank Lavarnie, Gillicothe, O., Greenfield 23, and are billed at Bainbridge 25, Waverly 26, Portsmouth 27.

HYATT FROST, manager of Van Amburgh & Co.'s Great Golden Menagerie and Circus, is lying ill at Chillicothe, O.

"OUIJ" JOHN ROBINSON'S CIRCUS performed at Pueblo, Col., Aug. 18, Colorado Springs 19, Denver 20, Longmont 21, Boulder 22, Golden 23.

TOM DASON, who was wounded in May last, it was thought at that time, mortally, and who has since been in the Harper Hospital, is rapidly recovering his health.

HAN NORMAN, who some time since went to Cuba, to exhibit his museum of curiosities, is requested to send his address to this office. During the past few weeks we have received a number of letters from his relatives, who not having heard from him for some months (the correspondence previously having been regular), fear for his safety.

JOHN H. MURRAY'S CIRCUS is billed to exhibit at Montreal, Canada, Aug. 25, 26, 27.

THE NORTH AMERICAN EXHIBITION, consisting of the elephant "Columbus," a cage of trained lions, under the charge of Mr. Pierce, the well-known lion-tamer, and the Wambold Brothers, acrobats and gymnasts, under the management of W. A. Waterman, have been performing in Brazil for some time past. An occasional correspondent, who encountered the show at Para, says: "The manager informed him that since leaving Rio de Janeiro they had done an excellent business, with the single exception of Bahia, where business was not only bad, but several members of the company were stricken with fever. They went thence to Pernambuco, where, it is said, they took over $4,000 the first two nights, and they continued performing in all the principal places along the coast down to Para. The expenses of traveling by the Brazilian steamers were very heavy, and although the receipts were large the profits proved to be small. They have now chartered a large American schooner, called the White Wing, under Capt. Williams, to take them to Surinam, and after visiting all the principal islands of the West Indies they will return to New York. When we parted company all were in good health."

THE SIDE-SHOWS of W. J. Metchear, now traveling with the North American Circus, will leave it on Sept. 1, and make a tour of the New England fairs, commencing at Mystic Park Sept. 2, thence to Myrick's, Mass., 10, 12, Framingham 16, 17, Bridgewater 18, 19, Concord 23, 24, Readville 25, 26, Taunton 30, Oct. 2, Marshfield 3, 4. The curiosities are as follows: Major Lang, a giant boy; Col. Steere and Miss Cora Ballard, dwarfs; Walter H. Stewart, born without hands or feet; a Circassian girl, a mermaid, a snake with two heads, a boa-constrictor, wax figures, Indian implements, and a collection of wild animals, among them a performing bear. Three tents will be used and there will be a band of five pieces, six wagons and fourteen horses. The show will be billed and programmed one week ahead.

THE NORTH AMERICAN CIRCUS AND HIPPODROME performed at Lowell, Mass., Aug. 20, Groton Junction 21, Clinton 22, Hopkinton 23, Milford 25, Hopkinton 26, Millford 27, Franklin 27, Taunton 28, North Attleboro 29, Greenwich, R. I., 30, Phœnix, Sept. 1, Brand's Iron Works 2, Westerly 3, Mystic, Ct., 4, New London 5, Norwich 6, Willimantic 8.

JOHN H. MURRAY'S RAILROAD CIRCUS performed at Quebec, Canada, Aug. 21, 22, 23, and is to show at Montreal 25, 26, 27.

J. W. STOCKBRIDGER, who has 1,400 ft. of bill-boards to rent, states, through an advertisement, that no circus has visited Fort Wayne, Ind., during the past three months.

THE GREAT EASTERN CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE will exhibit in Washington, D. C., Sept. 12, 13, Lecsburg, Va., 15, Alexandria 16. Our route will be shown at Hopkinton 25, Milford 26

FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
ANOTHER BRILLIANT SUCCESS
STANLEY McKENNA'S NEW DRAMA,
"A FIGHT FOR LIFE."
THE "CITY ITEM" OF AUG. 12 SAYS:
Mr. Stanley McKenna's new sensational drama, "A Fight for Life," which was produced last night, with that clever and charming actress, Charlotte M. Stanley, as the heroine, proved a decided success. The drama is of the most exciting kind, mixed with plenty of comedy. Miss Stanley plays the heroine, Mary, with much effect.
ITEM, AUG. 13.
"A Fight for Life" continues to draw remarkably well, and is a pronounced success. The theatre is filled nightly, and the scene in which the "Fight for Life" comes in is always received with the most cordial applause. The play will be withdrawn after to-night, but it has drawn large audiences, and could easily have run another week. Miss Stanley's engagement has been such a success that the management have re-engaged her. Monday night will be produced her drama of "Crime," which was received with so much favor when originally played here by her. Miss Stanley appears as Madge, a character which was written for her, and which is, in many respects, her best impersonation.
